No Special Rescue Force for Centennial Craft

Below Pilots, Cold, Empty Sea

By JIM BRAHAN

Once the 69 aircraft racing July 1 from London, England, to Victoria stream out over the Atlantic, they will be like trapeze artists performing without a net because there are no special rescue preparations made for any that may be forced to ditch, the Pacific Rescue Centre in Victoria told the Colonist Saturday.

"If any are forced down, normal search-and-rescue procedures will be taken from Halifax," the centre spokesman said.

He observed it would almost be an impossible task to guard all the planes on the transatlantic flight and explained there are not enough facilities for such a job.

"If any go down, they are going to have a tough time because it is a big hunk of water and a small plane is damned difficult to find."

He also noted that Mae West life preservers are of little use to anybody down in the North Atlantic because of the low water temperatures.

The race is only the third trans-ocean, trans-continent race in aviation history and is a major event in B.C.'s Centennial '71 celebrations. Prize money totals $175,000, with first-place finisher receiving $50,000 and the Prime Minister's trophy.

The centre spokesman said the planes will come under air traffic control from the United Kingdom during the first half of the trans-ocean flight, and under Gander, Nfld., the rest of the way.

"But if any go into the water, the crews could be in real trouble."

He explained that if a downed flyer is located, the search and rescue plane would drop a rescue kit which contains five packages. The two end packets are inflatable rubber life rafts and the three centre ones hold clothing, food and other rescue gear.

"All the packages are connected by nylon line, and when strung out it is more

Final Talks Snap

Net Fish Strike Begins

By DON COLLINS

A strike of 4,500 B.C. salmon net fishermen began on schedule at 6 p.m. Saturday.

Patrols of picket boats were reported moving into place in some areas during the evening. But many fishermen were far from their home ports and the job of picketing would be completed in stages, a spokesman for the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union said.

Victoria to Alaska

The final futile talks ran through Friday to 11 p.m. and lasted from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Saturday.

Jack Nichol of Vancouver, secretary of the union, said no further talks were scheduled.

Involved in the dispute are the fishermen's union, another union representing Indian fishermen — the Native Brotherhood — and the B.C. Fisheries Association.

Picketing — which will be scattered from Victoria to the Alaskan border — will include salmon fishing areas, fish camps, packer locations and processing plants.

However, picketing at the plants will be confined to the water and the shore workers will remain on the job unless the union finds that "unfair" salmon are being processed. Then a picket line would be put up in front of the building and the shore workers would be expected to honor it.

The union agrees that the plants can process salmon not caught by net, or by combination troller-net vessels.

The strike — first in eight years — comes about two weeks in advance of the fishing season's peak. It involves union demands for better payment.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Documents from the secret Pentagon war study show that U.S. military leaders were pressuring president Lyndon Johnson to expand the Vietnam war into Laos, Cambodia and North Vietnam in 1966 and 1967, Knight Newspapers reported Saturday.

The dispatch, as published in today's editions of the Philadelphia Inquirer, said that Johnson, his defence secretary, Robert McNamara, and other top civilian officials steadfastly resisted the military counsel. Large-scale invasion of Laos and Cambodia by allied forces did not occur until 1970 and 1971.

The article dealing with the papers also reported:

● The theory upon which the United States based its early involvement traces back to the administration of former president Harry Truman.

● That although Johnson told newsmen in 1966 that bombers were hitting only military targets North Vietnam, a secret Central Intelligence Agency report said 80 per cent of the bombing casualties were civilian.

● Then secretary of state Dean Rusk warned of "general international revulsion" if U.S. bombers raided Hanoi during a Canadian peace feeler to North Vietnam.

The report, said to have been culled from the Pentagon papers, was the second distributed by Knight Newspapers Inc. to the 11 members of its chain.

The report appearing in the Inquirer said Johnson resisted

Ellsberg

War Secrets Pursuit

Pentagon Suspect Surrenders Monday

BOSTON (AP) — A lawyer for Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, describing his client as unequivocally innocent of any crime in connection with the Pentagon documents on American involvement in Vietnam, announced Saturday that Ellsberg would surrender at 10 a.m. Monday to the U.S. attorney in Boston.

Ellsberg, 40, a former Pentagon researcher and now a research associate at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, was sought on a federal warrant charging unauthorized possession of top secret documents and failure to return them.

The warrants were issued at midnight Friday in Los Angeles.

Leonard Boudin, one of Ellsberg's lawyers, said at a news conference he had told FBI agents of the decision to surrender Monday and asked that they "refrain from their efforts to apprehend him."

"If the government would agree that if Dr. Ellsberg appeared today that he could be released on his own recognizance, then we would have no difficulty in having Dr. Ellsberg appear today," Boudin said.

Several hours later, a second lawyer, Charles Nesson, told newsmen that since there was no response from the FBI on the offer to have Ellsberg appear quietly, his client would surrender as scheduled on Monday.

Nesson said the lack of response "indicates to me — I suspect at any rate — that the government, the FBI, is more interested in making a highly publicized arrest than they are in simply having Ellsberg come forward."

Meanwhile Ralph Rampton, assistant agent in charge of the Boston FBI office, said, "There is a fugitive warrant out for Ellsberg and I can only say that as long as he is a fugitive we will be looking for him."

Threat On Queen

YORK, England (AP) — The Angry Brigade, a mystery underground organization that has planted half a dozen terrorist bombs in London, threatened Saturday to shoot Queen Elizabeth on a royal visit to this ancient city this week. It was the second threat on her life in less than a week.

Buckingham Palace went ahead with plans for the visit Monday, but police immediately tightened security.

The Angry Brigade is taken seriously by police. The organization claims responsibility for blasts at the homes of a government minister and the head of Scotland Yard, among others. No one has been hurt in the explosions.

The city's 1,900th anniversary is being celebrated this week, and the queen and Prince Philip are to ride through the streets with an escort of mounted cavalry.

Fedosseiev File Appears More Baffling Than Ever

LONDON (Reuter) — The riddle of a Soviet scientist who disappeared in Paris a month ago and turned up in Britain appeared Saturday to be more baffling than ever.

One London newspaper, The Evening Standard, said he was a Jew, a distinguished space engineer, a member of the Soviet Space Academy and one of the most decorated of Soviet scientists in the last decade.

The Daily Telegraph said he was a leading expert on Soviet anti-ballistic missiles and that reports he was Jewish were not confirmed.

Both agreed that he was not Anatol Fedosseiev, the name by which he had been known since his disappearance, that he spoke fluent English and that he was born in Leningrad in 1910, making him 61. First reports had given his age as 52.

The British government remained silent on these conflicting reports, but informed sources said:

● So far as they knew, his real name was indeed Fedosseiev.

● He was not Jewish.

● He had never been a member of the Soviet Space Academy, though he had a "tangential" connection with it.

● He was a prominent electronics engineer.

● He was No. 2 in the technicians' section of the large Soviet delegation to last month's international air show at Le Bourget Airport in Paris.

Reports from Paris after Fedosseiev's disappearance last month described him as a top Soviet space scientist and a vice-minister. But after it was disclosed last Sunday that he was in Britain, informed sources said he was not a vice-minister and had no direct connection with the Soviet space program.

Official statements have said Fedosseiev was in Britain and had been allowed to stay. The Soviet engineer was believed still at a secret hideout somewhere in the Greater London area.

Rocket Designer For Russia Dies

Soviet Union disclosed for the first time Saturday that designer of nation's space engines was Alexei Isayev, who died Friday at 62. Isayev designed Vostok, Voshkhod and Soyuz units, as well as Soyuz-Salute lab now orbiting earth.

Further Erosion

I CONFESS I did not have the intestinal fortitude to scrawl, "none of your damn business" over the recent long census form that was inflicted on many of us a month ago.

I tried, but the nagging fear of prison walls won out without too much difficulty.

I'm sure I was only one of thousands who resented this further erosion of personal privacy. I know all the pat answers doled out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics — that without my answers, all those bureaucrats down in Ottawa just wouldn't be able to continue running the country. That the answers were vital to our future growth as a nation.

I am unconvinced Canada will be a better place to live, easier to manage just because a lot of sheep told Big Daddy how many bathrooms in the family abode, what year their schooling ended, how much money they make and — their telephone numbers.

LIKE MOST, I guess, I did bare my financial soul and did tell them our house has two johns. But in a last desperate attempt at iconoclasm, I scribbled "unlisted" in the space marked for my telephone number.

There is also a strong chance I ruined the whole census by using ball point instead of pencil and that the computor might reject the thing out of hand. I hasten to assure the federal snoops this was an honest mistake.

It wasn't too long ago that Pierre, the noblest of Trudeaus, blared forth that government had no business looking into the nation's bedrooms.

But, with Pierre's full knowledge and probable approval, John Munro, the minister of health, goes out and hires 200 young people to research other young people for a Youth Culture 1971 study.

THE RESEARCHERS were given a list of questions to ask and a manual to guide them in the quest. Munro has already admitted the manual contains some rather personal questions, which again, are none of their damn business.

Like asking how young people provide for sexual needs — whether through regular dating patterns, prostitution, hustling on the street.

I trust most young people will tell this miniature CIA, in polite terms, you understand, just what to do with the questions. Munro says the study is needed to find out just what goes on in the minds of young people today. Well, if he needs a survey to determine this, the Hon. John Carr Munro is further out of touch than has been hitherto suspected.

THE VICTORIA branch of the Committee for an Independent Canada has announced its latest project. It, says chairman Peter Kuzzan, will begin picketing Victoria-area, American-financed stores — like Safeway.

I presume that Mr. Kuzzan knows 5,000 British Columbians make a pretty good living as employees of Safeway. I presume he knows the payroll is in excess of $15,000,000 per year and I presume he realizes Safeway has such a dominance of its field because it does a pretty good job of marketing, obviously give the customers the service they want.

But I have to wonder after the economic sanity of such groups, unless they have classified information showing that Canadian money is readily available to take over such stores as Safeway, or hundreds of other companies dominated by the Yankee dollah in our country.

than 500 feet long. The usual practice is to drop it to windward of the persons in the water and have it drift toward them," he said.

In the race, which finishes here July 7 when the first planes are expected to flash across the finish line between the Gonzales weather station and the beacons on Trial Island about 9 a.m., are: 23 single-engined planes, 31 twin engined, 12 turboprop and three jets.

Vancouver Island entrants are Rick Cockburn of Sidney who will solo his single-engined Harvard MK IV; Claude Butler, 1785 Verling, Central Saanich, who will pilot his twin-engined Aerostar 601 along with co-pilot C. H. Aasen of Vancouver and Fred Mainwood, 5083 Catalina Terrace, Saanich, who will be co-pilot in his Piper PA-24-180 with pilot S. R. Baxter of Edmonton.

In the race, between takeoff and finish line there will be six mandatory stops: Goose Bay, Quebec City, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Regina and Calgary.

Points will be awarded according to net flying time in each stage and the over-all winner's prize will go to the pilot with the highest points aggregate.

To allow the slower planes to compete equally they will be given takeoff times hours ahead of the faster models, with all departures computerized by race officials using a formula based on the aircrafts' known cruising speed under normal conditions.

Clover Point and Beacon Hill Park will be excellent vantage points for Victorians to watch the planes cross the finish line under full throttle.

Race officials said earlier there will be public address systems set up at both vantage points to identify the aircraft and pilots as they cross the finish line.

military leaders' pleas to expand the war on a large scale in 1966 and 1967, although permitting bombing and covert use of Special Forces in Laos and Cambodia.

U.S. and South Vietnamese force invaded Cambodia in April of 1970. South Vietnamese troops, supported by heavy U.S. air power but no ground troops, pushed into Laos earlier this year. The foray lasted about six weeks.

The Knight dispatch said:

During troop buildups and allied successes, in 1966, Gen. William Westmoreland, the allied commander, complained that communists were retreating to sanctuaries in Laos and Cambodia. Small U.S. units were operating along the Laotian border at that time, under the code name Shining Brass. On Feb. 21, 1967, the joint chiefs of staff petitioned the president for a series of new military moves, including expansion of Shining Brass.

Johnson approved extension of the operations up to 20 kilometers into Laos, but he turned down the generals' requests that battalion-sized units be moved across the border.

In April, 1967, the Knight article said, Westmoreland reported the military felt Laos would become "a major battlefield, a development which would take some of the military pressure off the south." Gen. Earle Wheeler, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, also told the president, "U.S. troops may be forced to move" against North Vietnamese troops in Laos and Cambodia, and he also raised the possibility "we may wish to take offensive action against" North Vietnam by invading it.

"The president remained skeptical to say the least," the Knight article said. It added that other civilians in the government opposed any widening of the war at that time, with assistant defence secretary John McNaughton warning any ground invasion into North Vietnam might bring China into the war directly and possibly provoke "a serious confrontation" between the United States and the Soviet Union elsewhere.

Big Rock Festival

Cycle Gangs Pocket Profits

McCREA, La. (UPI) — Motorcycle gangs may have pocketed up to $200,000 by grabbing $28 tickets at the gate of the "Celebration of Life" rock festival and selling them at cutrate prices to late arrivals, festival promoters said Saturday.

The bikers, hired originally as ticket takers and security forces, reportedly took the tickets down the road and sold them for $10 or $15 to long lines of young people waiting to get in.

Two gangs, the Galloping Gooses and the Wheelers, were escorted from the festival site Friday by Pointe Coupee parish law officers, who said the bikers were robbing people and beating them with clubs and chains.

By Saturday thousands were leaving the 700-acre Cypress Point plantation site in disgust and disappointment. The line waiting to leave was much longer than the line waiting to get in.

The Celebration of Life has had more than its share of bad luck.

Two persons drowned in the Atchafalaya River, where several thousand persons have skinnydipped each day to escape the 104-degree temperature, even though authorities warned of the river's swift currents.

The festival almost never happened in the first place, because of police and citizens' efforts to outlaw the affair.

Promoters said internal revenue service agents impounded ticket proceeds Saturday to hold against tax liens filed earlier in the day. The IRS would neither deny nor confirm this report.

Pregnancy Blockade

By G. C. THOSTESON, MD

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Please explain how the intrauterine device prevents pregnancy. My doctor said no one knows exactly how it works but that it was the most effective contraceptive next to the pill.

My neighbor told me the IUD must remain in position which prevents the fertilized egg from being implanted in the uterine wall. Is this true? If so I will have to consider a different means of contraception since I do not believe in willful abortion.

Also please tell me if an IUD must remain in positvn until birth, if a woman somehow becomes pregnant while wearing one.—M.M.

The IUD (coils, spirals, various shapes) is a very old idea going back, I believe, to the time of ancient Rome.

YOUR GOOD HEALTH

Nobody knew why it prevented pregnancy. In recent years more effective devices, made of plastic or other materials, have been developed — yet the exact way the IUD prevents pregnancy still is not clear.

One theory is that its presence changes the lining of the uterus making it hostile to the sperm. Another is that it accelerates the mobility of the ovum so the uterus does not readily accept implantation of it.

Thus I guess your question can be answered only on the basis of which theory you prefer. To me, it seems rather academic — a difference of a few hours, perhaps only a few minutes, in the determination of the exact moment the pregnancy is prevented, but that is a matter which, I'm afraid, you will have to settle for yourself until or unless more is learned about this.

The newer IUDs are proving second to the pill in contraceptive properties, meaning that there are occasional pregnancies. If pregnancy does occur, then the IUD should be removed promptly as otherwise it would interfere with the progress of the pregnancy.

'This Thing They Call Freedom of the Press'

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI)—The newsmen who disclose government secrets are "the same people who are firmly controlling American opinion through a biased and slanted" view of the world, Vice-President Spiro Agnew said Friday.

He said journalists are misleading the public into believing that most Americans are "solidly behind this thing they call freedom of the press."

U.S. Court Claim Challenged

Papers 'Pose Danger'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. government told the Supreme Court Saturday that publication of the Pentagon's secret Vietnam papers would "pose a grave and immediate danger" to the national security, jeopardizing efforts to free American prisoners and end the Indochina war.

At an extraordinary, two-hour hearing by the nine justices, attorneys for The New York Times and The Washington Post argued the government was unable to offer proof of its charges to support "a precedent-shattering attempt" to restrain a free press from publishing the news.

The high court, meeting in a 300-seat chamber jammed with lawyers, journalists, scholars and curious spectators, gave no indication when it might issue a decision on the right of newspapers to publish state secrets over government objections.

The Times and The Post decided independently Friday to withhold further publication of any part of its disclosures of the 47-volume Pentagon history of U.S. decision-making in the Vietnam war until the court hands down its ruling in the celebrated case, possibly on Monday.

Solicitor-General Erwin Griswold, the justice department's top prosecutor and former dean of the Harvard law school, contended in an hour-long argument the government should have the power to prevent disclosure of materials endangering the nation's security.

Griswold said he had spent Friday afternoon going over the documents with state and defence department officials.

They drew up a list of 10 of the potentially most damaging items, he said. One of them consists of four volumes of the Pentagon study dealing with material which, he said, if broadcast "to the entire world at this time would be of extraordinary seriousness to the security of the United States."

Griswold said publication of the materials in question "would affect the security of the nation, affect the lives of the citizens of the nation, affect the process of determination of the war and affect the recovery of prisoners of war."

Jimson Weed Makes Noxious List

TURO, N.S. (CP) — Jimson weed, one of Nova Scotia's most dangerous plants, has been placed on the noxious weed list by order in council.

The weed is also known as thorn-apple and by its technical name, datura stramonium.

Two or three ounces of any part of the plant is sufficient to kill a child. It has also been responsible for the loss of a number of hogs annually.

The name jimson derives from Jamestown, where a battle was fought during the American Civil War. One side made a brew of the weed and solid it to enemy soldiers, killing a large number of them.

Big Sweep Winner Ailing and Unaware

Stefan Jediny of North Vancouver said his wife was undergoing heart treatment in a hospital in Germany and didn't know she had won $49,600 with a ticket on Lombardo, the horse which placed second in the race at the Curragh, Ireland.

"Is that a fact? This will help to pay for my wife's treatment."

Mrs. Betty Oliver of Kimberley was the only other winner from B.C., taking third-place money of $24,800 with a ticket on Guillemot.

Educational Reform

IT'S THE SAME the whole world over. Bring up the question of reform in education and controversy is aroused. After four years of research, Japan has come up with a 10-year plan for its school system which is stirring up trouble, although it is expected to be adopted in time for a 1974 start.

It is a thought-provoking proposal which might find favor among some educationists in this country. It might be black-boarded too, for the very reasons it is being criticized by some Japanese.

It is Japan's third educational reform in a century. Unlike the first two — the establishment of universal compulsory education during the period 1867-1913, and the democratization of education during the American post-war occupation — it is technical in nature, for the most part.

In broad outline, the plan would increase the number of years of pre-university education from 12 to 14 — four years of primary instead of six, four of lower secondary instead of three, and six of upper secondary, instead of three. And compulsory education would start at age four rather than six.

It would improve the training of teachers, relieve them of administrative chores, and raise their pay to some 30 to 40 per cent above that of general civil servants.

Higher education would be diversified, and at the university level more state aid would be given private institutions to help bridge a gap between endowed national institutions and their poorer private "relations". It would allow university students, except those studying medicine, education or other professions, to graduate in three years.

There is general agreement in Japan, apparently, that the educational system needs overhauling, but critics say the projected reform does not address some of the basic flaws in contemporary education.

In particular, they see the new recommendations as furthering rigid centralized state control of schools at the expense of democratic education and more individualized teaching and learning. Some educators argue that the proposed program would revive an intense pressure for national unity that marked the militarist pre-war government.

For example, the president of Tokyo University has expressed a fear that increased government aid to universities will be used to encroach on university autonomy — something that seldom, if ever, comes to the fore on the Canadian scene.

And in a lengthy editorial one of Japan's leading dailies, Asahi, attacked the proposed reform for its centralization. It called instead for autonomous provincial schools which, it maintained, are essential if Japan is to have a democratic education rather than the old system which, in essence, inculcated into students an unswerving allegiance to authority.

There are those in Canada who are wondering if the dabbling in reform along this line here is bringing worthwhile results. Perhaps it is too early yet to tell. Perhaps it is too late.

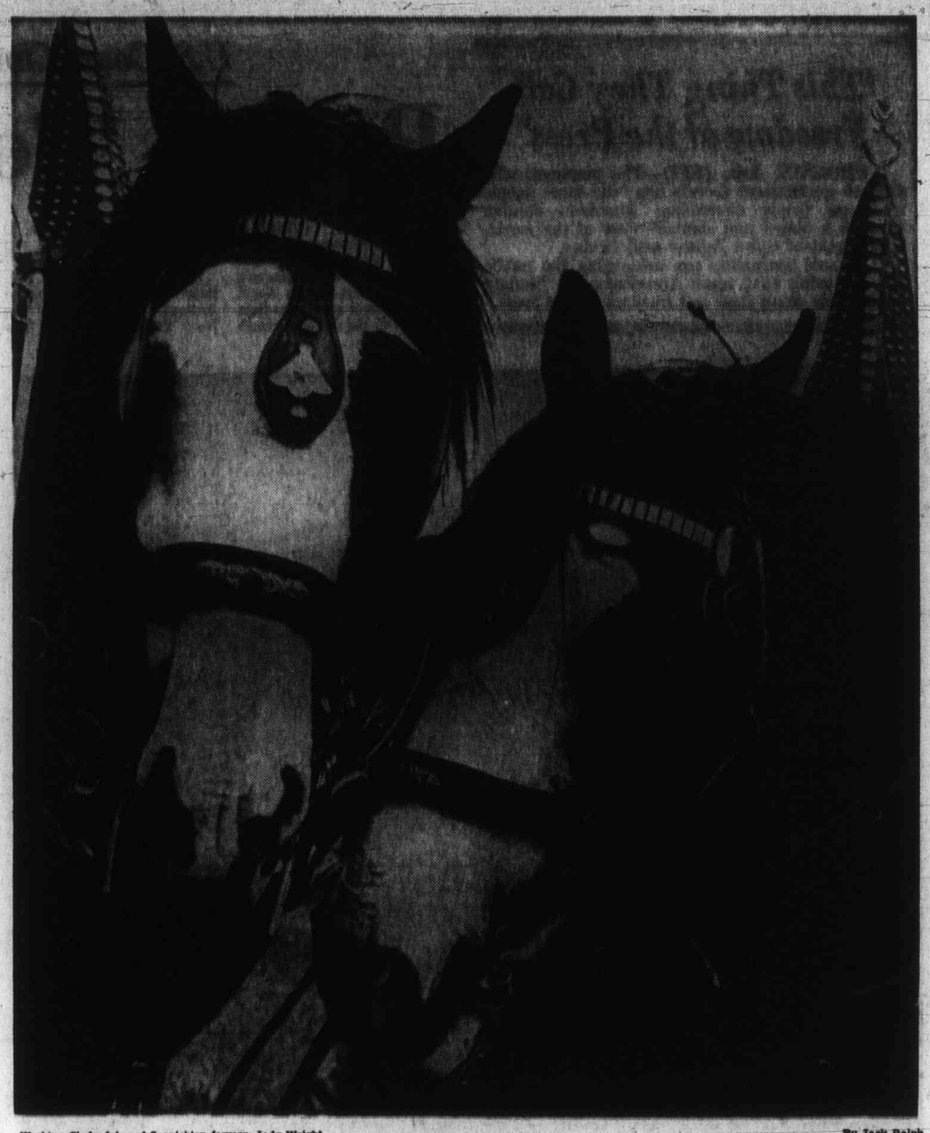

About Time

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS MINISTER Dan Campbell says the B.C. government will seek amendments to the Municipal Act at the next legislative session to give tenants the right to vote on money bylaws—a right now held only by property-owners.

Tenants, mainly apartment-dwellers, outnumber other voters in Vancouver now. Victoria is moving in that direction. The tenants are as stable a part of the community as most of today's home owners. And they pay taxes in their rent.

They may become aldermen and initiate money bylaws. But they can't vote on them at the polls.

It's about time for a change.

Mr. Chretien's Problem

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT and Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien painted a pretty picture of Canada when he said that unless some problem develops the federal government shouldn't call an election this year.

Though Mr. Chretien is fluently bilingual it appears that his use of the word problem needs some further interpretation in either of our official languages.

Obviously he does not understand problem to mean such mundane everyday things as high unemployment rates, continuing inflation, increasing labor-management disputes, falling overseas markets, the growing disaffection with Ottawa of the four Western provinces, the gathering strength of Quebec separatism, the acceleration of wastage of public funds by the federal government, the rising crime rate, the progressive deterioration of the Canadian ecology, the mounting dissatisfaction of our young people, the inefficient and high cost of government administration, and the failure to observe the democratic principles of debate and decision in the House of Commons.

It might therefore be reasonable to ask Mr. Chretien to define precisely what he means by the word problem. His answer might be as interesting to Prime Minister Trudeau as it is to the public at large.

Budget Sleight of Hand

By LUBOB J. ZINK

FINANCE Minister Edgar Benson has performed a remarkable feat with his budget-tax reform combination. While ignoring calls for substantial tax cuts, he managed to create the impression of tax reductions for most people.

He also seems to have created the impression of a soak-the-rich fiscal policy while actually lowering taxes for the high-income brackets (the top tax rate is cut from 82.4 to 61.1 per cent and the highest reductions go to those earning $100,000 and up).

The impression of tax cuts for most Canadians comes from Mr. Benson's removal of the 3 per cent surtax and from his increase of personal tax exemptions.

The surtax, introduced as a temporary anti-inflation measure in 1968, was to expire last year. The government, which by that time claimed to have abandoned the anti-inflation course, rammed an extension of the surtax through Parliament for another year.

It was a puzzling move, for it contradicted the Trudeau regime's belated attempts to restimulate the artifically-depressed economy.

Now we know why it was done. The Trudeaucrats needed the surtax so that its removal would create the illusion of a tax cut.

As for higher personal exemptions, they have been long overdue. The figures remained unchanged for more than 20 years.

The raising of basic exemptions from $1,000 to $1,500 for single, and to $2,850 for married taxpayers thus amounts to hardly more than official acknowledgement of the drop in the purchasing power of the dollar over the past two decades.

Genuine personal tax reductions in the budget fiscal reform package are thus limited to the proposed removal of federal-provincial taxes on the presently taxable income up to $500, the marginal lowering of rates for all married-status taxpayers and for single wage-earners below the $8,000-a-year income level, the improvement in child care allowances ($500 deductible per child under 14, up to $2,000 per family), the new special exemptions for the aged, the $150-a-year deduction for employment expenses, and a few such sundry items as deduction of moving expenses for taxpayers changing jobs and a higher limit on deductible charitable donations.

Even though these tax reductions will be partially offset in many cases by inclusion of more items in the new definition of income, they are not to be sneezed at. Mr. Benson estimates that of the present nine million taxpayers, he will lose close to one million altogether (those earning less than $500 of currently taxable income), and that the treasury will collect less than it does now from some 4,700,000 income-earners.

Who will make up for the loss of revenue that will result from what the Trudeau government presents as "a significant reduction of the tax burden borne by low-income Canadians?"

Mr. Benson's tables of the projected changes in the tax structure and rates show that in the personal income field taxes will go up for single wage and salary earners in the middle-income group.

But a glance at the tables shows that these increases, which range from 36 per cent for single taxpayers earning $9,000 to a maximum of 78 per cent for those in the $11,000 bracket, cannot possibly balance the reductions for all married taxpayers which go up from 15 per cent on $2,800 income.

This is where Mr. Benson's attempt to create the politically useful impression that he is soaking the rich comes in. He will tax capital gains.

Fair enough. This, too, like the increase in personal exemptions, has been long overdue. He prudently refrained from applying the near-confiscatory rates as outlined in the original white paper. However, the yield of the capital gains tax could not possibly balance his books. And since he has, also prudently, refrained from using the white paper's recipe for destruction of small business, there is not much left in the "soak-the-rich" category.

In the absence of more specific projections of the effects of the proposed tax reform measures and budget provisions of federal revenue, it is impossible to make even a rough estimate of how much of the lower yield from the 5,700,000 or so taxpayers who will pay slightly less can be recouped from the approximately 1,300,000 who will pay slightly more, and from the capital gains tax.

But regardless of Mr. Benson's expectations that the new tax structure should produce roughly the same revenue total as the old, it's safe to assume that he is heading into a period of heavy deficit financing.

His own forecast is a budgetary deficit of $750 million in fiscal 1971-72, and non-budgetary cash requirements of close to $2.5 billion.

While these two figures cannot be simply added up, they indicate the pressure the government will be putting on the money market in competition with the private sector for investment capital.

Yet, Mr. Benson's only hope of getting out of the deficit hole he is sinking into is expansion of the private sector which alone can broaden the productive tax base.

Opposition scrutiny of the budget and fiscal reform should therefore concentrate on whether or not the government is proposing the best possible use of the staggering amount of money it will have to borrow.

Unless this money is used mainly for strengthening the revenue-producing substance of the economy, no tax reform can mean more than pre-election window dressing.

Scientists Down on the Soviet Farm

By DEV MURARKA from Moscow

IT HAS been widely assumed in recent years that Soviet agriculture is in bad shape. But since the departure of Nikita Khrushchev, the conditions on Soviet farms have improved by leaps and bounds. Of course, there are still many shortcomings. But the series of successful crops produced in recent years, the self-confidence about agriculture which Soviet experts as well as politicians are beginning to display, indicate a significant degree of progress.

It is perhaps symptomatic of the progress made that Soviet planners are now more concerned about the organization and methodology of agricultural development than with the simple fact of increasing production. In fact, because production has been rising they are no longer uncritical of many aspects of agricultural conditions and policies.

Significantly enough, the problems of agriculture are now receiving far more scientific attention than they ever did before. And this scientific attention appears to be free of dogma and of many of the ideological and other shibboleths which hampered agriculture in the past. According to one count, some 70 research establishments of various kinds in different regions of the Soviet Union are concentrating on agriculture.

All activities in this field are co-ordinated by the National Research Institute of Agricultural Economics on the one side and the Lenin National Academy of Agricultural Sciences. These institutions are now not only concerned with day-to-day problems of agriculture, or even with five-year plan periods. Their attention is increasingly devoted to formulating plans for agricultural development over a long period, say for 15, 20 or 30 years. Of course, such plans cannot be very realistic since conditions change and any rigid adherence to such a long-term plan will be disastrous. What it can do is to provide a perspective or a framework within which all problems of agriculture should be viewed.

Soviet scientists are now arguing that for proper development of agriculture it is necessary to have immense material, financial and manpower resources over a sufficiently long period of time. The five-year plan periods should be regarded only as definite stages towards achieving an ambitious but realistic goal at a remote point in time.

The approach of the National Research Institute begins not with some fantastic statistical target around which research has to be conducted, but with the assumption that the key to success lies in improving the smallest unit in agriculture to its optimal point of efficiency, the smallest unit in this case being a collective or state farm.

Again, the institute is not dogmatic about formulating a model for universal application. It asserts that it is essential to take into account the different characteristics of each farm in any scheme for improvement.

A good deal of research in this field is being directed to analyze the organizational system of collective and state farms and the problem of their specialization. This is a rather complicated problem. First of all, it does not simply mean that the farm concentrates upon one or two products, but also that while its activities are directed towards maximum development of some categories, due attention is paid to other sectors, so that the economy of the farm does not become altogether unbalanced.

One of the problems, for instance, is to decide to what extent the agricultural produce of a farm should be processed elsewhere and what proportion at the farm itself. While maintaining that some two-thirds of farm products require preliminary processing, and that on the whole it is essential to separate farming from processing operations, it is felt strongly that for some purposes it is advantageous for processing to be done at farms themselves. This particularly applies to fruits and vegetables. The frequency of complaints about the poor quality of vegetables and similar items in the Soviet Union is in part due to the fact that they are taken long distances before being processed, and lose their freshness and taste before reaching the consumer.

In any case, it is argued, a modern farm is too complicated as a rule to cater for all its own requirements. Outside help is essential for servicing its machinery, for sales and transportation of its produce, for providing building materials and so on. These are becoming unavoidable functions of specialized agencies. But if the farms are to be economically efficient, exceptions to the general rule must be made in certain circumstances.

Another problem, a perennial one in Soviet agriculture, is that of procurement methods and policies. Soviet agricultural specialists do not appear to be altogether happy with what has been achieved in this field. Present procurement policies are not sufficiently flexible to allow for differentiation between different farms. Last July, at the Central Committee plenum which dealt with agriculture, Mr. Brezhnev himself complained that some regions were given too low and others too high a target for procurement.

To overcome this, specialists are now thinking of elaborating a scientific scheme for the development of each farm in all its aspects, including its role in procurement. But this is not an easy task. Recently, the director of the National Research Institute, Mr. N. Alexandrov, admitted that so far plans for only about 3 per cent of farms have been drawn up in this manner. True, it is not easy to formulate such plans with all the complications involved, but a beginning has to be made to make farms economically efficient, highly productive and free of the surplus manpower which weighs down upon some. But improvement in Soviet agriculture is no longer simply a matter of political pronouncements of hard work, hard cash and brain power. The results so far have been, if not ideal, at least encouraging.

Joy

There was a happening in Victoria that was a joy to behold. Unlike the affairs of violence and destruction which can occur on the spur of the moment without plans or direction, this joyous affair was an attainment resulting from seven years of dedicated work by many people — all with one common qualification — the desire and determination to achieve something worthwhile.

The many hundreds of people who accepted the invitation to see Victoria's Conservatory of Music in action were shown the proof that what was considered impossible a few short years ago had already been achieved.

Pupils of all ages demonstrated their own skills and the competence of their instructors, making it obvious that the glowing compliments of recent adjudicators were well-deserved.

There are few, if any, who question the fact that we have the best Conservatory of Music west of Toronto. What a pity that the directors are constantly worried about meeting the financial requirements every month. These money problems have threatened the very existence of the conservatory on many occasions in the past, and each time a life-saving donation has been made by someone who recognized the tremendous value of this institution to the whole area and the 600 students currently enrolled.

No doubt many of those who enjoyed the recent open house will respond to the appeal for funds, but how nice if other members of the community would acknowledge their responsibility and show appreciation by making a donation — thereby giving the conservatory's directors more time to do the important work which lies ahead.

Generous support in the past has provided tuition for many gifted students. It would be a pity if action in this direction had to be curtailed because too few people were willing to respond to the request for help.

Would it be too much to ask that in addition to the bilingual rigamarole on post boxes, giving a problematic delivery next day to certain places, it might be marked in plain Anglo-Saxon figures the time of the next pick-up from that particular box? Going Higher

A good point in the Daily Colonist editorial of 12 June, 1971 — should not the price Canadians outside of Quebec must pay for the retention of that province within the Dominion — (realm) be a legitimate debating point?

Most certainly, because the price already high may shortly be raised even higher in abolition of the monarchy — which many of us feel is in the offing — and in preparation behind closed doors. Otherwise, why all this secrecy? Evidently the Monarchist League of Canada does not regard this as a vain fear. Anything can happen here.

Strachan Blows His Top—from Edmonton

Strachan

Bob Strachan is a bluff, honest politician whose chief weakness as provincial leader of the NDP lay in the fact that his highly-developed sense of social injustice was coupled to a short fuse. During 12 stormy years in that post Strachan blew his top dozens, perhaps hundreds of times, and Premier Bennett capitalized on that image by dismissing him

Ian Street

It makes little difference now that Strachan was often right in the past because the political advantage usually, though not always, was grabbed by Bennett.

But now, as a private member of the legislature for Cowichan-Malahat, he's freed of the burdens of high office and seems to be thoroughly enjoying life and politics.

The old sense of outrage over injustice, however, is still as strong as ever as shown by the fact that it recently popped up while Strachan was on a trans-Canada travel trailer tour with his wife.

In Edmonton, he picked up a copy of the local paper, turned to the classified ads to check the state of the economy, and — boom, Strachan blew his top.

Starting off in typical fashion, Strachan writes: "When I read it I felt like turning around and heading home to raise some merry hell.

"No wonder people are flocking into British Columbia looking for work when there are so many advertisements in one issue of one paper for jobs in B.C. Where is Gaglardi's Alliance of Businessmen? What is Canada Manpower doing?

"We have unemployed teachers in B.C. but Richmond school district has to advertise in Edmonton. Other ads are for bodymen, mechanics, shop foremen, engineers, salesmen, millwrights, graders, etc.

"(And) the next question that comes to mind is; in just how many other papers across the country are similar ads appearing?"

The result has been an accelerated population growth in this province that is roughly twice that of the nation as a whole and 10 times Quebec's growth rate.

B.C. needs skilled workers to keep up and increase the pace of its development but the emphasis is on skills.

But there is no way, and Bennett is sincere where he says all Canadians must be able to go wherever they wish in the country, to keep out the unskilled who usually end up on welfare.

Bennett's promise, contained in his budget speech last Feb. 5, that the government will create a minimum of 25,000 new jobs by October has led recently to a lot of unnecessary tub-thumping on the government's behalf.

The result is ads entitled "Premier Bennett reports" which appeared in major B.C. newspapers last weekend.

In the ads he repeated Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures which the premier claimed show his budget promise has already been fulfilled.

Quoting January to May figures for this year Bennett says there was an increase of 53,000 jobs in B.C.; easier to swallow is the 27,000 increase for the month of May over the same period in 1970.

NDP leader Dave Barrett agrees essentially with the second set of figures quoted by Bennett, but argues that since the work force increased by 16,000 during the period that the actual number of new jobs was 11,000.

That, if not downright illogical, is a pretty thin argument. So Barrett tried to cover up by appealing to the lieutenant-governor for public funds to publish ads giving the opposition viewpoint.

Both the premier's and the opposition leader's arguments seem to be way off the main issue which is how to find jobs for those who are already in B.C. and unemployed.

Listen to what Strachan has to say: "I am publicly drawing attention, first of all, to the fact that as long as B.C. employers advertise in out-of-province newspapers for job applicants then we can expect more and more people to flock into B.C.

"Anyone who is unemployed, seeing such a variety of job offerings in B.C., must surely think there is a job for him in B.C.

"Next, I am asking every employer in B.C., large or small, to contact the various trade unions or the B.C. Federation of Labor for help in finding suitable employees from among the B.C. work force."

Strachan concludes his letter by saying: "If the department of education has to bend some rules or give some special consideration to a crash upgrading program for any individual who requires a little extra training to meet the needs of a specific job — then it must be done.

"This will need understanding from employers, if such a course is necessary, in order to get some individual placed, but if we are going to find jobs for those who want them it must be done.

"Everyone is complaining about the costs of social welfare for able-bodied men — we will never get the welfare rolls down unless the proposals I have outlined above are operative."

The fact that Strachan had to write to a reporter in the press gallery, asking that his views on jobless situation be published, raises the prospect of an experiment which should prove interesting to the premier if, as Bennett claims, he wants to keep the public fully informed.

The political impact won't be as great (for Social Credit) but that shouldn't bother a premier who after nearly 19 years still clings to the tattered remnants of his shining cloak of non-partisanship.

And it will serve just as well to replace those tobacco and liquor ads which are going to disappear Sept. 1.

West Learns Art Of Acupuncture

By ARTHUR MILLER, from Hong Kong

Western medicine has made tremendous advances during its 250-year history. Chinese medical knowledge has virtually stood still for 5,000 years. Now the West is turning its attention to traditional Chinese medicine.

The recent visits to China by scientists from several parts of the world, along with a stepped-up campaign in China to promote the use of "indigenous methods" in treating illnesses has put the spotlight on Chinese traditional medicine.

The art of acupuncture, which involves the insertion of needles into specific points on the skin, is drawing the most attention. In recent years, China has credited acupuncture with curing a great variety of illnesses and physical afflictions, ranging from the after-effects of polio to blindness. The Chinese have claimed particular success in curing deaf-mutes.

During a recent visit to the mainland, two U.S. scientists were given a demonstration of the use of acupuncture as a local anesthetic even for purposes of surgery. Acupuncture is becoming one of the most widely used healing methods in China. In Kwangtung province, which borders this British colony, for example, an estimated 70 to 80 per cent of cases in public health centers are treated with herbs and acupuncture.

But what has Western medicine intrigued with acupuncture and other forms of traditional Chinese healing methods is not the specific cure claims but the fact that Chinese medicine, unlike that in the West, has never separated the mind from the body.

It is a generally accepted fact that 70 per cent of illnesses today are psychosomatic, due to the hectic pace and resulting stress of modern life. As Dr. Oscar Wexu, a Canadian doctor who studied acupuncture in Hong Kong, expresses it:

"One of the greatest advantages eastern medicine has is the fundamental angle of approach. The Chinese view the human being as a comprehensive whole; they do not separate mind from body. One aspect cannot be affected without affecting the other.

"Until the end of the Second World War," Dr. Wexu adds, "psychosomatic medicine was virtually unknown (in the West)."

The effect of this growing awareness of the potential value of traditional Chinese medicine has been twofold. First, increasing numbers of Western doctors are travelling to Taiwan and Hong Kong to study acupuncture and other methods. Second, more effort is being put into research to establish the scientific nature of Chinese medicine.

Research into Chinese medicine is now being conducted in France, Italy, Austria, the Soviet Union, Japan, Holland, the United States and Korea, as well as in China.

The one thing that differentiates acupuncture from Western medical methods is that it is an art as well as a science and is encased in philosophy and history.

The philosophy is that the individual is a microcosmic arena in which the elemental forces of the universe contend. Health is dependent upon the maintenance of harmony within and without the body by means of a complicated series of relationships. The interaction of the two elemental forces "yin" and "yang" define the state of an individual at any given time.

In the human body, "yin" and "yang" must be maintained in exact balance or disease will supervene. The technique of acupuncture is based on the theory that within the body there are six major channels or meridians of "yin" and six of "yang." From these numerous subsidiary channels branch off.

This network is believed to connect 365 points in the skin to the internal organs. When the "yin" and "yang" are out of balance, and illness occurs, health can be restored by inserting needles at one or more of the 365 points that have a relationship to the organ that is causing the problem.

So far there is no scientific proof of the existence of these channels and points — and in the West only the French medical associations accept the practice of acupuncture.

A North Korean physician, Kim Bong-han of Pyongyang University, claims that he has identified acupuncture nodules and their connecting channels by the use of radioactive phosphorus. But his report has never been verified.

Experiments in the West a number of years ago proved that the action of applying a syringe needle has more to do with certain kinds of cures than the medicine in the syringe. In one experiment, half the patients had the appropriate medical dose injected into them and the other half had distilled water. All were cured.

Much mystery and myth still surround traditional Chinese medicine. But now a concerted effort is being made to peel away the fiction from fact and see what remains that may be of benefit to others.

French Expert Predicts Oil Bonanza

Canada New 'Near East'

By HAROLD KING
From Paris

French oil experts predict that Canada will become the new Near East of the world and is destined to revolutionize the international power game because it contains two-thirds of the world's oil reserves.

The French oil men point out that Canada contains "unsuspected oil riches" without counting the wells already being tapped.

Pierre Guillaumat, president of the French state-owned oil corporation ERAP, says Canada's present oil production, although estimated by him to have increased 2½ times between 1959 and 1969, is "as nothing compared with the future potentialities."

An article in the French weekly Actualite describing the development of the Canadian oil industry says Ottawa's 10-year-old national oil policy is being subjected to serious reconsideration.

The weekly says: "... we are far removed today from the threats of President Lyndon Johnson to Prime Minister Lester Pearson involving a reduction of Canadian oil imports into the United States."

The future of oil in Canada depends, according to French oil men, on the decisions to be taken by Ottawa and "on the cohesion of the provinces and on this celebrated national oil policy."

Oil development policy in Canada is being watched with keenest interest by the leading governments in Europe. Actualite says:

"Of course, the Americans are the first to be interested, but the whole of Europe can only benefit by the development of Canadian oil production, especially in the north and east of Canada."

Whatever happens, considers Actualite, the Near East is in danger of losing one of its most important customers, the United States. This will involve a change in present power relations and reduce prices for European buyers.

"We need only bear in mind the visit of Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to Canada in 1969, when Russians and Canadians talked about the possibilities of mutual co-operation in the Arctic."

New Bounty Hunters Track Down Polluters

CNS, from Los Angeles

The new breed of bounty hunter in the United States is an ecologist who knows when big companies are violating the anti-pollution laws and does something about it.

Recently two men concerned with the growing pollution of the Ohio and Monongahela rivers took a canoe trip on each of them. They travelled 65 miles. What they discovered in the water led them to the suspected sources of high chemical-content pollutants.

The result: the men reported their findings to the Environmental Protection Agency, the government's pollution watchdog. Now four major industrial plants on the rivers have been charged with 73 violations of an ancient 1899 anti-pollution act being used by the Nixon administration as an enforcement tool in the absence of any more effective law yet enacted by congress.

If the companies are found guilty of violating the act, maximum fines of nearly $250,000 could be imposed. Under the 1899 statute, the government splits the fine equally with the informants who provided the evidence of wrongdoing.

Modernized Premises And Teaching Methods

BUT SOME THINGS NEVER CHANGE

... The Standards for Our Girls!

Norfolk House has recently completed a new building, providing modern facilities that help us increase the awareness of girls in all grades from 1 to 12. But new space for arts and handicrafts, visual aid improvements added to existing laboratories and classrooms are just part of the picture. The long-established Norfolk House traditions live on, and the girls appreciate the fact and respond in like manner. Now is the time to enroll your daughter in this well-established school.

Omission of Windfall Tax Reform Puzzle

By HARRY YOUNG
Business Editor

Now that finance minister Benson proposes to place a tax on capital gains from practically everything except a person's own home plus one acre of land around it, the question arises: Why has he left out windfalls?

Under the tax reform proposals income accruing from participation in sweepstakes, premium bond prizes, lotteries and other forms of gambling, will continue to be free from tax, just as it has been in the past.

Thus, the fellow who wins a prize of $5,000 in say, a Montreal civic lottery will get off Scot-free while the fellow who takes a gambling flier on a penny mine and makes two or three hundred dollars out of the transaction will be subject to tax on half the amount of his capital gain.

Good Logic

So long as the government was imposing no tax on capital gains made on the stock market or elsewhere, there was good logic to extend the privilege of tax freedom to those who bought an illegal sweepstake ticket and won a prize as a result.

Now, there is an entirely new situation. Gambling and sweepstake gains and losses are ignored, but gambling in stocks, commodities, real estate are not.

What is the difference? Mr. Benson will probably say that the windfall exemptions are pure gambling while the other types of deals are speculative investments.

Yet who would buy a sweepstake ticket unless he thought he had a speculative chance of winning something big?

Tax Greater

For Canada which is in the teen age of its development, capital gains must be regarded as a questionable national asset. Even if it does produce some $80,000,000 a year as has been forecast, the discouragement incurred by the potential tax on capital gains could be of far greater importance than the amount of the revenue raised.

Of all the tax proposals, capital gains is the one that is most likely to raise problems of administration. A first quick glance at the provisions for calculation suggests that the "loop-holers" are going to have a field day before all the leaks can be plugged.

Admit Losses

The finance department may also have decided that as nobody but the promoters make any certain profit out of sweepstakes it would also have to admit the capital losses of unsuccessful sweepstake participants.

In other words it would not pay.

There are, of course, a good many who will doubt if the new capital gains tax will provide a steady or profitable source of revenue to the government after all deductions, collecting and beaureaucratic costs are met.

All capital gains tax really does, in the opinion of most countries that have tried it, is to convince the public that it is not discriminating between the capital "haves" and the capital "have-nots."

Concept Lost

When the Diefenbaker government first ordered a study of Canada's overall taxation policy, it had in mind some modernization that would cut out unfair taxation, reduce the incidence of double-taxation, and most important of all simplify the whole proceeding so that the layman might understand what his commitments were.

Unfortunately none of the plans presented — Carter, white paper or proposed legislation — fulfil the original concept.

Indeed it looks certain that more and more people after tax reform will find the employment of an expert necessary to file his income tax statement each year.

No Power

Maybe the post-tax reform election in Saskatchewan which threw out the Liberal government, and left the party with no provincial power west of Quebec, should be taken as a sign that Ottawa no longer carried the support of the public, particularly in the West and that Premier Bennett is probably right in his comment on the Saskatchewan affair, that if the federal government called an election its majority would go the same way.

The tax reform, if less objectionable than many people felt, is still not an endearing document.

Values Grow

Report of mining production for 1970 in British Columbia shows production to have established a record value for the ninth successive year.

The Department of Mines and Petroleum Resources places a value of $485,200,000 on all mineral production, up $20,800,000 (4.5 per cent) from 1969.

Copper was again the most valuable single product with a value of $121,300,000. Crude oil worth $60,400,000 came next and molybdenum third with $52,400,000, replacing zinc in third place.

The mines report says that declines in value of zinc and iron concentrates were more than offset by increased value of copper, molybdenum, lead, silver and nickel.

The value of industrial minerals went up by $1,600,000 largely due to increased value of asbestos.

The value of structural materials decreased by $9,400,000 or 17 per cent, because of decreased value of cement, sand and gravel.

In the fuels the main gain was in the greatly increased production of coal. Crude oil values also registered a small gain in this sector.

All Not Lost

Is Britain deserting the Commonwealth by joining the European Common Market, or was it the Commonwealth that deserted Britain?

That point has been brought up by Sir Alex Douglas-Hume, British Foreign Secretary, who in a recent speech said that Britain's trade with the Commonwealth fell from 21 per cent of the whole to 12 per cent in the 60s "and the process continues."

The Foreign Secretary was not apportioning blame. He noted that while for a long time the Commonwealth was an unrestricted market for British manufactured goods, the old Commonwealth countries were fast accelerating their own industrial expansion.

Large Volume

"We shall continue to do a large volume of business with the Commonwealth but that cannot supply us with the rate of expansion necessary to keep up our standard of living."

Another British politician, Francis Pym, parliamentary secretary to the Treasury, said the one of the old Commonwealth nations that had to be protected was New Zealand because of its dependence on the British market for its main products and he added that the Common Market countries had agreed that New Zealand was a special case for which special solutions would be found.

So far as Canada is concerned it is not anticipated that Britain's Common Market entry will have any serious affect on the over-all pattern of Canada's trade with Europe as a whole, and that it may indeed open the door to Canadian trade in Europe that hitherto was unattainable.

This, at least, is the more mature interpretation now put upon the British disentanglement with the economic side of the Commonwealth.

Scientists Probe Top Brains

Executives Have Secret Talent

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — There's no ESP listed on the New York stock Exchange, but it's being touted by two scientists as the newest glamor issue in the field of high finance and personnel management.

Since 1962, the scientists have studied about 9,000 businessmen at the PSI Communications Project at the Newark College of Engineering.

Their findings: extrasensory perception, or ESP, is a major factor in corporate decision making.

"I was skeptical at the outset," says Prof. John Mihalasky. "But I've been converted to a firm belief that telepathy, clairvoyance, and precognition play a large role in the function of management and can be made to play a larger one yet."

Mihalasky and research associate Douglas Dean claim to have found through their experiments a correlation between surperior management ability and an executive's ESP.

Corporation presidents are constantly making decisions based on little data or data that is inaccurate, they contend. Thus, says mihalasky, a successful executive has to have a sense of awareness above known sensory means.

The executives were also rated for "dynamism" by a simple psychological test. There was a correlation between the most dynamic executives and those with the highest extrasensory perception.

The scientists studied 25 executives willing to discuss their company's profit sheets. Those whose companies had doubled profits in the preceding five years scored the highest on the ESP test. The president who scored the highest increased his company's profits by $1.3 million.

"We're not saying ESP is the total basis of decision making," Mihalasky says.

"But we found that particularly successful businessmen have particularly high precognitave powers."

Mihalasky says he was surprised to note that three of every four businessmen tested believe in ESP and many have sent letters telling of precognitive experiences.

Export Policy Discussed

REGINA (CP) — There are three directions a Canadian policy on providing water to the United States could take, says Alvin Hamilton, agriculture minister in the Progressive Conservative government of John Diefenbaker until 1963.

Hamilton was here Friday to outline his ideas for a proposed Canada-U.S. water policy to the joint annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Resources Development Association and the Canadian Water Resources Association.

He said Canada could say water will never be disoussed with the U.S., could admit it has some surplus and sell it as a commodity on short-term contracts or could consider the real value of water in terms of added value to the U.S. gross national product each year and devise some method to obtain a good percentage of that value for Canada.

Hamilton said he attended a meeting on water needs between U.S. and Canadian representatives in 1965 and the Americans said they could import about 108,000 million gallons daily, about seven per cent of Canada's minimum available supply.

By assuming an acre-foot of water (enough to cover one acre to a depth of one foot) adds about $3,000 a year to the U.S. GNP from industrial use, an additional $200 to $300 from recreational use and about $50 from agriculture, Hamilton said 108,000 million U.S. gallons daily would add between $360,000 million and $400,000 million annually to the U.S. GNP.

A U.S. gallon is four-fifths of the Imperial gallon used in Canada.

A second method of determining the value of Canadian water exported to the U.S. would be to value it at 22 cents for each 1,00 gallons, the cost of desalinating sea water with atomic power. This would result in 108,000 million gallons a day being worth about $8,600 million a year to Canada.

Himilton said the idea is to get the U.S. companies that need the water to develop some of their industries in Canada so the resultant benefits will accrue to the Canadian economy.

He also said the prairie provinces should be actively thinking about putting more water into storage for the future. He suggested an expenditure of about $300 million over the next 30 years could result in at least 5,000 million acre-feet of water be stored in natural basins.

Grenade Kills Seven Miners

BANGKOK (UPI) — A grenade tossed into a tungsten mine killed seven miners and wounded 20 others Friday in a dispute over how long the miners should stay underground, police said.

It was the second such incident at the mine in two weeks. Thirteen miners were killed and 20 wounded in similar fashion in the previous incident.

Suit Pending

NEW YORK (UPI) — Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc., the publishing house which has the rights to former president Lyndon Johnson's forthcoming memoirs, said Friday it will sue Newsday for printing excerpts from the book. Newsday is a Long Island, N.Y. newspaper.

ANNOUNCEMENT

D. F. Hanley Agencies Ltd. (Shakespeare St. Office) is proud to welcome three more fully-trained and experienced Realtors to the "Golden Rule Team."

H. L. (LEWIS) SUTTON

You will probably recognize "Lew" from his photograph as having served the public in Victoria for many years. His association with the local service clubs is one of the reasons why "Lew" is so well known in the city.

JERRY LEE ALLEN

Formerly from the Prairies, Jerry Lee has been in Victoria since 1966. She would like to invite all her friends and business associates to drop in and see her at her new office (3021 Shakespeare St.). Jerry Lee is fully trained and prepared to handle all your Real Estate requirements.

FRED CAMPBELL

Born and educated in Victoria Fred boasts that he knows every street in the city. During his long and varied career in Real Estate he has helped many people. Give Fred a call to talk about your needs, or just to talk about camping (his hobby), or to learn about good old Victoria when the population was 65,000.

We invite you to call 388-4294 to discuss the properties offered in the classified section by "Lew", "Jerry Lee" and "Fred" or any other Real Estate requirements you may have. They are dedicated to serve you and your family.

Yuba City Orchard

New Suspect Sought In Slayings

YUBA CITY, Calif. (UPI) — Authorities were reported Saturday to be looking for a possible second suspect in the mass slayings of 25 men whose bodies were found along the Feather River.

The Sacramento Bee said the investigation centres on an incident May 24 near the small farm community of Rio Oso, 13 miles southeast of Yuba City, the object of the search is said to be a white hippie-type youth.

Juan Corona, who pleaded innocent to slaying 10 of the victims, was arrested May 26. Corono remained in a hospital Saturday after complaining of chest pains.

The newspaper said four school children saw a car speed past peach orchards toward a levee and then turn back when blocked by a fence. The Bee said the children found blood trailing the car.

Investigators for the public defender were reported to have found a heavy blood-stain, where the youthful driver had stopped to slam down a trunk lid. The blood is still being analyzed to determine if it is human.

Hanoi Balked At Oslo's POW Idea

OSLO (UPI) — Norwegian Foreign Minister Andreas Cappelen said Saturday Norway offered to receive American prisoners of war in Indochina for internment in Norway, but that North Vietnam rejected the offer.

The foreign minister, interviewed by the labor government newspaper Arbeiderbladet, said Norway made the proposal to North Vietnam at the request of the U.S. government.

"North Vietnam rejected the offer and said this was a political problem which would be solved through negotiations once the U.S. government has fixed a date for complete withdrawal of its troops from Indochina," Cappelen told the newspaper.

Flyaway Plane Stripped

YUMA, Ariz. (AP) — Federal aviation administration officials say they will be unable to determine how a plane flew for two hours without a pilot because vandals stripped the craft before investigators could arrive.

Richard Uruchurtu, chief of the Yuma flight service station, said the instruments, wheels and propeller of the plane were taken.

The plane took off Thursday afternoon when Charles Fox, 18, of Calexico, Calif., started its engine by twirling the propellers. Fox said he tried to stop the plane but was unable to do it. The plane flew for more than two hours before it crashed on a restricted military bombing range east of Yuma.

Officials said the wheels and instruments were needed in order to conduct an investigation.

245 Escape 171 Caught

SALVADOR, Brazil (UPI) — Police Friday reported capturing 171 of the 245 prisoners who broke out of Pedra Preta jail Thursday night in a mass escape in which two inmates were beated to death.

Students Told 'No Jobs Here'

PENTICTON (CP) — A spokesman for the Canada Manpower Department warned students Thursday not to travel to the Okanagan Valley for work picking fruit.

Joe Callewaert, labor co-ordinator, said local high school students are being given first preference for jobs.

He said students without a job already lined up are wasting their time.

Let's Talk Real Estate by Jack Mears

The value of Real Estate is inextricably tied to the political atmosphere of the country in which it is located and its value will rise or fall according to the actions of those governing the country.

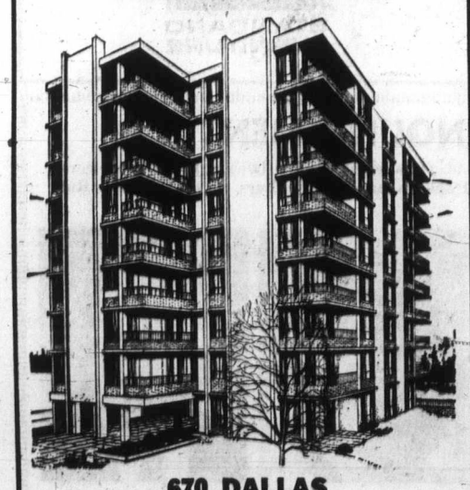

Here in Canada we are lucky enough to have a relatively stable political situation and consequently real estate is and always has been a good investment.

Last week Mr. Benson tabled his budget together with sweeping tax reform proposals and I understand that the English version of the Bill runs to nearly 600 pages.

Included in the Bill are provisions for a capital gains tax and changes in the regulations affecting the application of depreciation on capital cost allowances and their recapture. Whilst it is still too early to fully assess the impact of these changes on the values of revenue properties, there will undoubtedly be a considerable effect. We are thoroughly investigating these changes and would be only too pleased to discuss them with you. Just call 598-3321.

Dison Counters Pollution Foes:

Fisheries Tests Answer Objections

Officials of Dison Development Ltd. thought their problems with the plagued Sunro copper mine near Jordan River were nearing an end last fall when they reached agreement with a major international group on financing of the operation.

After weathering a flood and two closures due to financing difficulties within the past decade, it appeared that lack of money was the only major obstacle standing in the way of resuming production at the mine.

Last month, however, Dison learned there was an additional, and possibly more serious hurdle to cross when the provincial Pollution Control Board advised the firm its request for a waste disposal permit for the mine's tailings had been turned down.

Plan Opposed

Dison had sought to dump up to 1 million gallons per day of milling effluent into the Strait of Juan de Fuca near the mine site, but naturalists, fishermen, conservationists and others objected to the plan on the grounds that it would ruin a natural beach and destroy marine life.

They said this was what had happened in other years when the mine was operating. Among the objectors were the provincial health and recreation and conservation departments, Capital Regional District and Greater Victoria Health Board.

Without the permit, Sunro will not be allowed to resume production.

An appeal against the ruling will be heard by the Pollution Control Board Tuesday, but in the meantime, all development work has ceased and about 50 men have been laid off, pending the decision.

4,000 Acres

Sunro itself consists of 78 claims covering approximately 4,000 acres. Beginning at the highway about one-half mile east of the community of Jordan River, the property extends northward, straddling the river.

Confirmed ore bodies approach 2 million tons, but as only about half of the 16 known ore zones have been explored to date, it is possible to expect a total of 10 million tons, said Charles Campbell Jr., general manager of Dison.

Capacity of the Sunro mill, set about 1½ miles inside the mountain, is about 1,500 tons per day, so if an average annual production of 500,000 tons is assumed, the mine could have a life expectancy of between 15 and 20 years.

It is in the milling process that the waste known as tailings is produced. To extract the copper from the rock the ore is ground into tiny pieces.

Chemicals are then used to float the copper to the top where it is skimmed off. The chemicals and waste rock combined with water and known as slurry are then carried by pipeline to their disposal point.

Among the suspended solids which would make up almost 25 per cent of the million gallons per day would be minute parts of copper, nickel, iron, lead, zinc, silver, chromium, molybdenum, manganese and arsenic.

If granted, the pollution control permit would also allow the use of cyanide in the process, but Campbell said this would not be used unless a different type of copper ore were discovered later that needed it.

During earlier operations of the mine, the slurry was simply piped to the top of a small cliff, and allowed to run down its side and onto the beach. When the tide came in, it carried it away, spreading it over the beach as it went.

The Dison plan, however, calls for the pipeline to continue completely down the cliff, be buried beneath the beach and extended to a distance that should make it emerge and discharge its effluent about 150 feet below low-tide line.

Location of the pipeline would also be moved further eastward on the advice of an oceanographic consultant, Campbell said. A study, he said, had indicated that the best location would be one near the eastern tip of a small bay because sea action in the area is from west to east and the slurry would be carried away.

An analysis of the sea bed, he said, had also led the consultant to predict that there would be no settling in the first two miles from shore because it was a high energy zone and that the majority of the tailings would either settle over a broad area between two and four miles out or be dispersed in the north Pacific.

"Less than five per cent of the material we produce will be retained on the beach," Campbell said. Any odor involved would be very slight, he said, pointing out that the miners themselves are not aware of any odor even though they work near the chemicals in a confined area.

A tailings pond capable of holding up to four hours' production will be installed to prevent waste from entering the Jordan River in case of a pipeline break, he said. The mill can be shut down in 10 minutes, so this will be a sufficient capacity.

Campbell said the emergency pond had been requested by the federal fisheries department which has since given its approval to the disposal plan.

The recreation and conservation department, among others, has suggested that all tailings should be retained in a pond and used for landfill purposes, but he said the fisheries department is not in favor of tailings ponds.

Other Use

He also said that such ponds required a large amount of land and that the increasing population load meant that any suitable land could have a higher social use by serving people.

"The company feels that approval in principle by the fisheries department after exhaustive tests answers the objectors," he said.

Aside from the firm's contention that its waste disposal plan would not harm the area, Campbell said the mine could contribute significantly to it.

About $500,000 has already been spent in development work and another $2.75 million would be in the form spent before operations begin, hopefully in the fall.

Of this, he said, $1.75 million would be in the form of capital expenditures and another $1 million would be in working capital.

Economy Lift

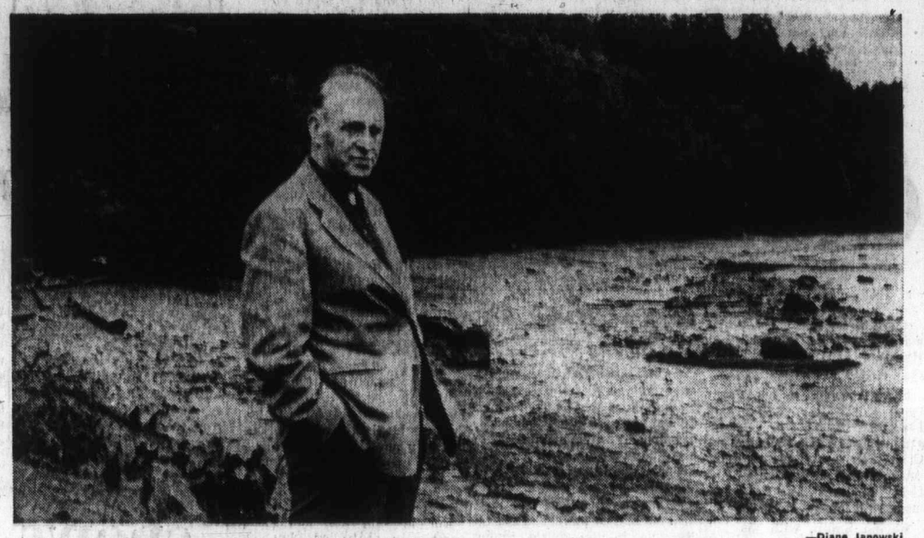

Annual contribution to the area economy after production begins, he said, would be about $2 million. Half of this would be for supplies and the other half would take the form of salaries for the 100 to 120 men who would be employed in the mine.

The compnay will be making no provision such as bunkhouses for transient workers, Campbell said, so the men would be permanent employees and would live in the Jordan River, Sooke and Victoria areas.

Many of the men who were working on the mine before the permit was refused and work stopped already have homes in the area, he said.

Negotiations are currently under way to purchase water to run the mill from a B.C. Hydro pipeline.

Campbell said final plans have not yet been settled, but the copper concentrates produced will likely be shipped from the mine by truck to Hatch Point, near Mill Bay.

After 'Ugly' Saturday

Sandringham Outlook: Worst Yet To Come

By DON COLLINS

The worst is yet to come.

That was the warning from some unionists after Saturday's "ugly scene" on the picket line outside strike-ridden Sandringham Private Hospital at 1650 Fort.

Insults were hurled in both directions and there were incidents of jostling and reported minor assaults, as union members from as far away as Nanaimo and Vancouver greeted "strike-breakers" reporting for work at the hospital.

Organized labor, bolstered by church groups in Victoria, has rallied to the side of the 28 women who have been on strike almost nine months for a first contract.

Saturday's demonstration, which greatly enlarged the normally small picket line, was planned in advance as part of a program labor has dubbed a "fight for social justice."

Estimates from both sides indicated there were more than 100 pickets blocking entrances at the front and back of the hospital.

They arrived at 6 a.m. and were gone by 12:30 p.m.

Two Victoria policemen kept a close watch on the procudure but laid no charges. Three security guards were on the scene with dogs but made no move to interfere.

Sandringham administrator Mrs. Margaret Reynolds said the guards did not arrive late, as someone had indicated, but had remained inside the hospital through the night. They have been doing so for some time now, she said.

One picket said he was knocked down by a truck that "barged through" the line in front of a driveway. He said he was not hurt.

Others said they narrowly missed being hit by cars that, "gunned their way" through the lines.

Said another picket: "One of the girls arriving for work slugged me over the head with her purse, butted her cigarette in my ear and called us all some pretty bad names."

A number of those who showed up to work at the hospital claimed they were pushed around by the pickets. Some retreated to their homes rather than try penetrating the picket lines.

A man who drove his daughter to the hospital so that she could work said someone reached into his truck and punched him in the face. The back window of his truck was broken and the outside mirror ripped off.

Mrs. Reynolds said some of the women who reported for work were frightened and crying.

"This was an ugly mess out here today," she said. "One young girl came in almost hysterical. She had thumb marks on her arm."

She said one small woman worker "lifted her little foot and kicked one of those big brutes on the shin. He had a look of surprise and he backed off."

She said also that she had received a number of crank phone calls.

"One of them told me he would put a bullet between my eyes if I didn't get out of this job. But that kind of talk doesn't bother me."

Larry Ryan, secretary of Victoria Labor Council, said the length of the strike and refusal of National Nursing Homes to negotiate with Canadian Union of Public Employees had created an unbearable situation for the strikers.

"Obviously, people are getting emotional at this point," he said.

There was also the fact National Nursing Homes intended to spend as much as $5 million to build a retirement centre in Oak Bay.

"This kind of thing is getting them down," he said.

National Nursing Homes — a Vancouver-based company — does not own Sandringham, but manages it.

The women were earning $1.50 an hour, the minimum wage at the time they went on strike, last Sept. 30.

Hydro Dispute Worsens

Electricians Threaten To Step Up Strike

A union spokesman said Saturday night from Vancouver there was a "good chance" the strike of 2,000 electricians against B.C. Hydro will be stepped up in tempo by Monday.

But he offered no indication of what form the strike might take.

Work stoppages were started on a rotating basis 25 days ago by local 258 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and by last Monday the pattern was increased to include most of the 2,000 workers.

Skeleton crews have been maintained.

Picketing has also been extended in a move to keep other unionists off the job. Friday this idled more than 1,000 of Hydro's office workers.

Ray Haynes, secretary of the B.C. Federation of Labor, was scheduled to address a mass meeting of Vancouver and Fraser Valley strikers today.

The 151,000-member federation has pledged support to the IBEW and has vowed it will take a stand if the provincial government attempts to use legislation to force them back to work.

Monday Is Show Time

The Native Childrens' Centennial '71 Tattoo, currently on tour around B.C., will visit Victoria today and Monday.

Greater Victoria Centennial 71 committee spokesmen said Saturday they were told by Isabel Dawson, minister without portfolio, that the tattoo, composed of nine groups from various regions around B.C., would give free performances in addition to their show at 8 p.m. Monday at the Memorial Arena.

A few of the groups, spokesmen said, will perform 6:15 p.m. today and at noon Monday in front of the legislative buildings.

Other groups, they said, will entertain the elderly at a rest home at 847 Dunsmuir, Esquimalt, about 1 p.m. Monday.

Cost of Monday night's show, spokesmen said, will be $1 for adults and 50 cents for students and children.

UCLA Junior Shaves World 440-Yard Record

U.S. national AAU championships in Eugene, Ore., produced a new world 440-yard 'dash' record when John Smith (above), 20-year-old UCLA sprinter, was clocked in 44.5 seconds. The listed record is 44.7 seconds. At the same meet, Marty Liquori was an easy winner in the mile event with a time of 3:56.5 and Sid Sink set a U.S. record of 8:26.4 in the 3000-metre steeplechase.

Captain Leads Adanacs To Victory Over Rocks

VICTORIA	15	7	8	173	188	14
Vancouver	15	6	9	199	181	12

Next game: Tuesday—Coquitlam at Vancouver.

COQUITLAM — Captain Bill Bradley took on an unaccustomed scoring role Saturday to lead Coquitlam Adanacs to a 20-14 victory over Victoria Shamrocks in a game which broke a second-place deadlock between the clubs in the Western Lacrosse Association.

Bradley, one of the better playmakers in the league each season, collected four goals and two assists and only one Adanac — Bob Ormans — failed to pick un at least a point as Coquitlam took full advantage of Victoria defensive lapses.

SOMETHING WRONG

"When somebody like Bradley, who isn't a goalscorer by any stretch of the imagination, can score four goals, then you know something's wrong with the defence," said Bert Bertoia, Shamrock co-coach.

Adanacs took a 4-3 lead in the first period and then collected, according to Bertoia, "five softies" in the second period on the way to a 12-7 lead.

"Mental, mental, mental!" bemoaned Bertoia of the performance which saw the Rocks fall below .500 for the first time this season. "We've tried to get them to hustle back down floor but they don't turn around fast enough to pick up their checks — and it's in again."

EARLY CONTROL

Bertoia said the Shamrocks completely controlled play for the opening 10 minutes but couldn't take advantage and as a result quickly found themselves behind.

Any chance of a third-period comeback ended when the Adanacs beat goalkeeper Doug Thompson, who made 37 stops to 34 for counterpart Merv Schweitzer, three times in a 21-second span.

John Allen and Mike Gates each scored three times for Adanacs, who are now just four points behind leading New Westminster Salmonbellies. They have played one more game than Shamrocks.

Ed Kowalyk had his finest night since coming out of retirement, playing a strong defensive game as well as leading the losers with three goals and two assists.

Ken Alexander and Dennis Somner were the only other players to beat Schweitzer more than once.

Mike BeauTac, who also scored, continued to have injury problems and left the game in the second period with a bad leg. He has been playing with a face mask to protect a broken nose.

Boston Red Sox, the early season leaders, stopped defending champions Baltimore Orioles cold Saturday in the featured doubleheader in American League play.

Sonny Siebert pitched a six-hitter and drove in five runs in a 10-2 second-game rout after Luis Aparacio's fourth hit of the game gave Boston a 3-2, 10-inning victory in the opener, which was televised coast-to-coast.

The Red Sox took a 2-0 lead into the ninth inning of the opener on run-scoring singles by Rico Petrocelli and Aparicio but Boog Powell slammed a two-out, two-run homer to force extra play.

Gary Peters, picking up his first win since June 4 to bring his record to 7-5, blanked Orioles in the top of the 10th and then sacrificed Billy Conigliaro into scoring position. Conigliaro scored when Aparicio's line drive fooled Frank Robinson and sailed over the right-fielder's head.

Siebert, who hit his fourth home run of the season, now has 11-4 record. He lost his shutout after having blanked the Orioles on two singles through seven innings, a bunt single and Chico Salmon's first home run ending the string in the eighth.

The double win closed the third-place Bostonians to within six games of the Orioles, who had won 21 of their previous 26 starts.

Second-place Detroit is only a game in front of the Red Sox, holding on to the runner-up spot by blanking Cleveland Indians, 1-0, behind the five-hit pitching of Joe Coleman, 7-4.

The Indians, who were shut out for the third straight time and have only scored two runs in their last 48 innings, gave up the run in the fourth inning when shortstop Eddie Leon came up with a wild-throw on what should have been an inning-ending doubleplay.

STRETCH LEAD

Oakland Athletics stretched their lead over Kansas City in the Western Division to 11 games by downing the Royals, 4-2.

Jim "Catfish" Hunter gained his 11th win, striking out 10 batters and hitting a triple and single to bring his batting average to .365.

McLAIN WHIPPED

Mel Stottlemyre got back on the winning track with a four-hitter and Bobby Murcer hit his 13th and 14th home runs as New York Yankees sent Denny McLain, 4-14, to his ninth straight loss with a 4-0 decision over Washington Senators.

McLain, who won 31 games only three years ago for the Tigers, has now lost to every team in the league this season.

In other action, Marty Pattin scattered 11 hits to even his record at 7-7 as Milwaukee Brewers blanked Minnesota Twins, 5-0, and Rich McKinney's run-scoring single with two out in the 10th inning gave Chicago White Sox a 4-3 win over California Angels.

Chicago has now won six straight, the club's longest streak since 1967.

Jerry Koosman regained his form Saturday for his first victory since May 14 but his triumph over the Montreal Expos, 2-1, didn't get New York Mets any closer to the streaking Pittsburgh Pirates atop the National League East.

Koosman allowed three bases on balls, struck out none, hit a batter and committed a wild pitch in snapping a personal four-game losing streak.

The left-hander held the Expos hitless until Ron Hunt singled with one out in the sixth inning.

LOTS OF RUNS

The Pirates stayed three and a half games ahead of the Mets with an 11-9 victory over Philadelphia as they won their 10th game in their last 13 starts.

Bill Mazeroski, Bob Robertson and Roberto Clemente drove in three runs each with Mazeroski's two-run homer, his first of the season, snapping a 4-4 tie and sparking the Pirates to their victory. Robertson hit two home runs.

Second Game.

Dock Ellis notched his 10th consecutive victory and became the National League's first 12-game winner, although he was routed in the ninth inning when the Phillies, jumped on him and Dave Giusti for five runs.

Denny Doyle singled home two runs and Tim McCarver hit a three-run homer.

TRIGGERS SPURT

Bobby Bonds triggered a three-run fourth inning with his 17th homer of the year and pitcher Ron Bryant climaxed the rally with a two-run single as San Francisco Giants defeated Houston Astros, 3-1.

Astros scored first when Jack Hiatt singled following two bases on balls in the second inning, but Bonds' homer got the Giants started against Larry Dierker, who failed for the fourth time in his quest for his 11th victory.

George Stone scattered eight hits and earned his first victory of the season in pitching the Atlanta Braves to a 1-0 victory over the slumping Cincinnati Reds.

The Braves scored the game's only run in the fifth inning and Stone made it stand up for his first victory in four decisions.

Desperation Pass Sinks East Stars

LUBBOCK, Tex. (AP) — Substitute quarterback Chuck Hixson of Southern Methodist fired a desperation 23-yard touchdown pass to Nebraska's Joe Orduna with 31 seconds remaining Saturday night to give the West a pulsating 33-28 victory in the 11th Annual Coaches All-America football game.

Hixson, who played the game in the shadow of Heisman Trophy winner Jim Plunkett of Stanford led the West 57 yards in five plays after Alabama's Scott Hunter had galloped three yards for a touchdown with 2:44 remaining to give the underdog East a 28-26 lead.

Plunkett, the No. 1 draft pick of the New England Patriots, thrilled the record crowd of 43,320 and a national television audience as he guided the West to a 19-point third quarter explosion to overcome a 21-7 deficit.

Three Share Quebec Lead

MONTREAL (CP) — Three players were tied for the lead with two under par 142s after Saturday's second round of the $16,000 Quebec Open golf championship.

Lew Taylor of Lachute, Que., Duke Doucet of Windsor, Que. and Tom Nettles of San Diego were the leaders going into final round.

Trowbridge was tied with John Elliott of Fort Lauderdale, Montreal's Phil Giroux and Max Thompson of Montreal.

Hulme Earns Pole Position

Angels Suspend Johnson

ANAHEIM (AP) — Alex Johnson, the 1970 American League batting champion, was suspended indefinitely without pay Saturday by California Angels "for failure to give his best efforts to the winning of games with which he is concerned."

The announcement was made by the club's home office. The Angels' 32-43 and fighting to stay out of the American League West cellar, lost a 10-inning 4-3 decision to the White Sox in Chicago Saturday.

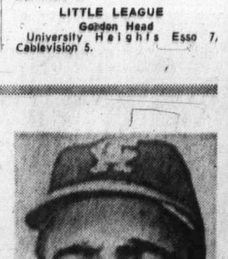

A club official said the suspension came 10 days after Johnson was given an official warning by general manager Dick Walsh.

Walsh said Johnson was "in constant violation of club rules and regulations," but he did not specify which rules.

"Walsh and Alex met the day after the trading deadline and he was placed on formal notice," said the official.

"It is tragic that a player of his talent has not applied himself. We waited this long in hopes of salvaging the individual. I have exhausted my patience," said Walsh.

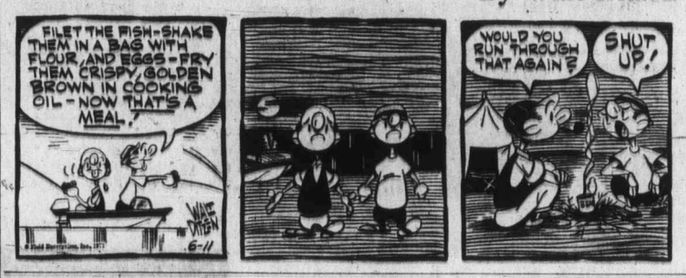

If the suspension lasts longer than 10 days, the player may have his case automatically reviewed by the commissioner.

Tacoma Driver Wins Feature at Western

Revenge might not have been the motive, but Ron Eaton of Tacoma got a bit of it with his main-event victory over Dave Cooper of Victoria before 3837 spectators at Western Speedway.

Eaton, beaten by Cooper last Saturday in the O'Keefe Opener main event at Langley Speedway, took the lead on the sixth lap of the 50-lap race Saturday and hung on in the first Early Late Stock Car Association of the Northwest event ever held in Canada.

Eaton was beaten twice Saturday night by Cooper. Cooper won the "A" trophy dash while Eaton finished third and Cooper was second in the fast heat in which Eaton came fourth.

In the main event, Eaton got through when Gary Kershaw, the pole-sitter, had to go around a spinout involving Mark Meers, John Harris and Mike Armstrong on the sixth lap.

For the next nine laps, Eaton was closely pursued by another Tacoma driver, Jackie Rupper, who won the fast heat. The challenge was taken over on the 15th lap by Kershaw until the 31st when a heating problem knocked the Victoria driver out of the race.

Cooper, about a quarter of a lap behind at that point, took over second place and began a slow climb, finally getting close enough to seriously challenge on the last two laps.

On the final circuit, Cooper was trailing Eaton by about a car length and made his bid on the last turn, taking the outside of the track. But the extra distance of going high was too much for Cooper to overcome and he finished three-quarters of a length behind Eaton.

NEW RECORD

Kershaw set a new super-stock record for the four-tenths of a mile circuit with a time of 17.37 seconds, averaging close to 83 m.p.h. Kershaw held the old mark of 17.58 seconds, set on May 1 of this year.

Eaton and Cooper get a chance to settle their argument today when the ELSCAN drivers wind up their Western Speedway appearance starting at 1 p.m.

Results:

McFaul's Work Saves Match

A brilliant guest appearance in goal for Victoria Royals by Iam McFaul was the only bright spot in a dull exhibition soccer match as the Royals and a Vancouver Junior All-Star team battled to a scoreless tie Saturday night.

McFaul, goalkeeper for Northern Ireland and Newcastle United of Division I in the English League who is holidaying here, first showed his class 20 minutes into the first half.

Displaying lightning-fast reflexes, McFaul snatched the ball neatly out of the air after young forward Brian Budd had broken through and fired a shot from close in.

He tipped another shot from Budd over the bar moments later and then impressed the crowd of 380 with his beautiful taking of a high ball from a free kick.

Royals' coach Brian Hughes used the match as a chance to give several of the younger players, who usually only see action in the last few minutes of a regular game, a start.

Regulars such as winger Peter Wilson, fullback Howie Anderson, link-man Peter Robarts, centre-forward Ash Valdal and George Hyne were dropped for the game.

Hughes' idea might hve been alright but as an exhibition it was a flop. The youngsters failed to click as a unit and rarely put any sting into their shots at David Burk.

Ray Telford, back in the side after playing for Canada, was the only Victoria player to impress but for the crowd the match was a bitter disappointment after Royals' brilliant start in the western Canada Soccer League season two weeks ago when they blanked Vancouver Spartans, 3-0.

Concordia, Eagles Win

Unseed Upset

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Onny Parun, an unseeded and unheralded New Zealander, upset Marty Riessen of the United States, 9-8, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, Saturday to join four Australians and three Americans in the quarter-finals of the men's singles at the All-England tennis championships.

Aussies through to the last eight are top-seeded Rod Laver, second-seeded John Newcombe, third-seeded Ken Rosewall and Colin Dibley, top man in the Australian Davis Cup team.

Stan Smith, the towering soldier from Pasadena, Calif., led a trio of American players through to the quarter-final, including Cliff Richey of Sarasota, Fla., and Tom Gorman of Seattle.

STOLE SPOTLIGHT

But it was Parun, the 24-year-old New Zealand national champion, who stole the spotlight with his victory over Riessen, conqueror of fifth-seeded Arthur Ashe in the third round.

Parun, in this his fourth year at Wimbledon, made Riessen — who has had victories over Laver and Newcombe this season — look like a beginner at times with masked backhands, delicately-judged volleys and booming serves.

However, the giant-killer has a tough path ahead of him in his bid to become the first New Zealander to win the men's singles at Wimbledon since Anthony Wilding made a four-year sweep of the crown from 1910 to 1914.

He meets fourth-seeded Smith in the quarter-final on Monday.

RICHEY WINS

Smith, who got special leave from the U.S. Army to play on the European tennis circuit this season, eliminated veteran Australian Roy Emerson, 2-6, 6-1, 6-2, 97.

Richey defeated fellow American Jeff Borowiak, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, 6-4, while Gorman reached the quarter-final with a victory over 19-year-old Australian Ross Case on Friday.

Dibley put an end to the surprising run of Mexican left hander Joaquin Loyo-Mayo, 6-3, 8-6, 6-3.

NEXT PAIRINGS

Redhaired Laver, bidding for his fifth Wimbledon crown, and Newcombe, trying for his third title, both won through the last eight on Friday. Laver defeated Tom Okker of the Netherlands and Newcombe eliminated Alex Metrevelli of Russia.

Other pairings in the quarter finals are Laver versus Gorman, Rosewall versus Richey and Dibley against Newcombe.

WOMEN'S UPSET

Judy Dalton of Australia pulled off the big upset in the women's singles Saturday with a 9-8, 6-3 win over fifth-seeded Virginia Wade of Britain.

Some Games Standards Achieved But Canadian Records Hold Firm

Debbie Brill

RICHMOND (CP) — Canadian records remained unequalled Saturday but winning performances in six of the 16 trials reached Pan American Games' standards.

That brought the total ot 16 events out of 32 in which the Games' standards were met. The Candian Track and field Association announced earlier that if two persons had the same qualifying effort for any event, the one who did it at the Richmond trials would be given preference.

The selection committee was to meet late Saturday night with the team probably to be announced today.

Those making the standards during the trials are all but guaranteed positions.

Sprinters Charles Francis of Toronto and Patti Loverock of Vancouver completed their doubles Saturday, qualifying again with performances well under the games' standards.

Francis, who just missed Harry Jerome's 100-metre record Friday, was close again in the 200 metres with a 21.0 clocking. Miss Loverock again defeated West Vancouver's Stephanie Berto, covering her event in 23.6 seconds, a tenth off the Canadian record she shares with the runner-up and veteran Irene Piotrowski of Vancouver.

SHARE OF RECORD

Debbie Brill of Haney won the high jump as expected, but had to jump off against Patty Wilson of Ottawa after both had gone out at 5'9½", just over the games' standard.

Three Ontario performers came up with the other standard-breaking wins. Abby Hoffman of Toronto took the women's 800 metres in 2:06.1. George Puce of Toronto won the men's discus at 198'1" and Nancy McCredie of Brampton, making an unexpected comeback from retirement, took the women's shotput at 47'7".

SURPASS STANDARDS

Victoria's Penny May, with her Canadian record of 13.5 seconds in the 100-metre hurdles, was one of 10 winners to surpass games' standards along with Francis and Miss Loverock on Friday.

Miss May was also over the games' standard in finishing second to Brenda Eisler of Vancouver in the long jump.

The other standard-breaking performances were turned in by Carol Martin, of Thornhill, Ont., with a B.C. Open discus record of 166'7", Joyce Sadowick of Vancouver (400 metres), Tony Nelson of Lasalle, Que., (110-metre hurdles), Wilf Wedmann of Vancouver (high jump), Bruce Pirnie, Regina (shotput) and Rick Dowswell of Sarnia (javelin).

Unseeded Kiwi Pulls Upset at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Onny Parun, an unseeded and unheralded New Zealander, upset Marty Riessen of the United States, 9-8, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, Saturday to join four Australians and three Americans in the quarter-finals of the men's singles at the All-England tennis championships.

Little Rosewall, the 36-year old veteran who is one of the most popular contestants at Wimbledon, defeated fellow Australian Fred Stolle, 6-4, 7-5, 7-9, 6-4.

Dibley put an end to the surprising run of Mexican left hander Joaquin Loyo-Mayo, 6-3, 8-6, 6-3.

NEXT PAIRINGS

Redhaired Laver, bidding for his fifth Wimbledon crown, and Newcombe, trying for his third title, both won through the last eight on Friday. Laver defeated Tom Okker of the Netherlands and Newcombe eliminated Alex Metreveili of Russia.

Other pairings in the quarter-finals are Laver versus Gorman, Rosewall versus Richey and Dibley against Newcombe.

WOMEN'S UPSET

Judy Dalton of Australia pulled off the big upset in the women's singles Saturday with a 9-8, 6-3 win over fifth-seeded Virginia Wade of Britain.

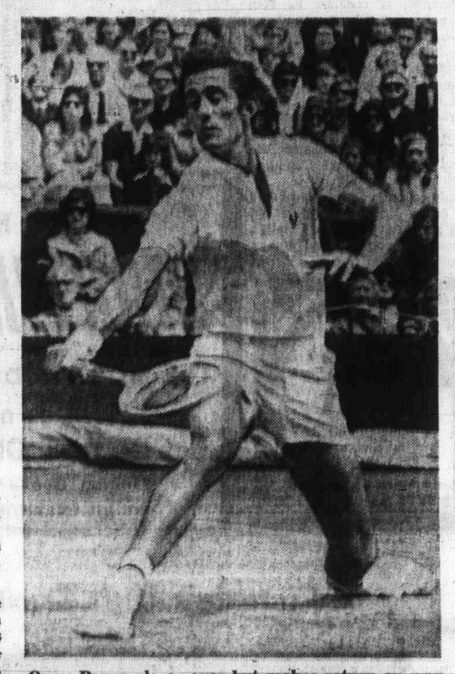

Other women's winners Saturday, third seeded Yvonne Goolagong of Australia and sixth-seeded Nancy Richey Gunter of the U.S., and Winnie Shaw of Scotland.

Miss Goolagong recovered after a bad first set to beat Lesley Hunt of Australia, 1-6, 6-2, 6-1.

Mrs. Gunter defeated Saigo Yansone of the Soviet Union, 6-3, 6-3, and Miss Shaw downed Lesley Bowrey of Australia, 1-6, 9-7, 6-3.

In the quarter-finals Monday, it will be top-seeded Margaret Court of Australia against Miss Shaw, Kerry Melville of Australia against Mrs. Dalton and Billie Jean King of the U.S. against Francoise Durr of France.

Jane O'Hara of Toronto and her mixed-doubles partner John Bartlett of Australia won their second-round match against Pakistani Munawar Iqbal and Britain's Jackie Fayter, 6-2, 6-3.

U.S. Seniors Nip Canada

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — Captained by Bill Terrell of Charlotte, N.C., the United States seniors golf team won the international triangular seniors golf matches Friday with 23 points.

Canada's hold on second place with 18½ points, was due in large part to play by Phil Farley and George Hevenor, both of Toronto, and ailing Gordon Taylor of Montreal, who beat both of their opponents to gain two points each.

Britain trailed with only 12¼ points.

Salem Captures Saranac Stakes

NEW YORK (AP) — Salem, who moved into the favorite's role when Calumet Farm's Son Ange was scratched, held on for a neck victory over Farewell Party Saturday in the $56,500 Saranac Stakes on the closing day of the Belmont Park spring meeting.

Jacinto Vasquez sent Salem, racing in the colors of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Linger's Christiana Stable, over the mile in 1:34 4-5 for first money of $19,748 and his fourth win in six starts this year.

Italian Keeps Ring Crown

PALERMO, Sicily (AP) — Bruno Arcari of Italy stopped Argentine challenger Henrique Jana in the ninth round to retain his world boxing council junior welterweight title Saturday night.

French referee Georges Gondree stopped the match 45 seconds into the ninth round. Jana had both eyes nearly closed by Arcari's blows.

Pitching Highlights Softball Tourney

Bate Construction won two of the five games played and all five ended up with shutouts.

In between, Campbell river defeated Bell's Men's Wear, 8-0, Strathcona Hotel defeated Seattle CB Hawks by the same score with Geoff Hett hurling a one-hitter and Seaboard blanked Bell's, 2-0, behind a two-hit performance by Glen Bullen.

Bates and Strathcona will meet in the winners' bracket final of the double-loss event in today's action which starts at 8 a.m. at Central Park.

Bill Shortt got both hits off Bullen, both singles. Bullen struck out 11 and allowed only one base on balls.

Harv Stevenson collected three hits in four trips to the plate in Bates' opener, driving in three runs with a home run and two singles.

In Bates' second win, George Banks hit a bases-loaded single to right field in the fifth inning and the ball got through Purdy Kivimaki trying to make a shoestring catch, allowing three runs to score.

Pete Landers of Campbell River struck out nine Bates' batters but was hindered by four errors. Three of the five hits off Landers were in the four-run fifth inning.

Irish Ball Wins Thrilling Derby

THE CURRAGH, England (AP) — Irish Ball, ridden by French jockey Alfred Gilbert, stormed to a three-length victory in a sensational Irish Derby on Saturday — a horse race that started with favorite Linden Tree left in the stalls.

The Irish Sweepstakes was based on the race.

Gilbert sent Irish Ball, bay colt by Baldric II out of Irish Lass, to the front two furlongs from the finish and won by three lengths from second-place Lombardo.

American-bred Guillemot, bought by Irish trainer Paddy Prendergast, was a short head away in third place at the end of the 1½-mile race over a turf course. The winning time was 2:36 3-5.

Irish Ball was a 7-to-2 choice in a field cut to 15 runners because of the last-minute withdrawal of The Last Hurrah, owned by John McShain of the United States.

Lombardo, ridden by British champion jockey Lester Piggott, was 13 to 2 and Guillemot 16 to 1.

But the sensation of the race was the failure to 7-to-4 favorite Linden Tree, second to Mill Reef in the English Derby, to get going.

Fourteen thoroughbreds shot out of the stalls, Linden Tree refused to leave.

Finally Duncan Keith managed to get Linden Tree started. But it was too late. The horse was two furlongs behind the field and had no chance of making a race of it.

So in one little stall at The Curragh departed the hopes of many people all over the world who held Irish Sweepstakes tickets on the Linden Tree.

Cougar II Stakes Claim As Top Grass Runner

INGELWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Cougar II, high weight and heavily bet, staged a powerful run though the stretch to win the $125,000 Ford Pinto Invitational turf handicap at Hollywood Park Saturday to put in a claim as perhaps the top grass runner in the country.

Jockey Bill Shoemaker piloted the Chilean star, Cougar II, from far back in the 1½-mile marathon, raced on the outside entering the stretch, cut in to the rail and overcame Fort Marcy, the well-known trans-continental commuter, to win by a neck.

First race — $7,500, claiming, three-year-olds, seven furlongs:

Farmer Construction had its lead in the Senior Amateur Baseball League cut to one game Saturday when upset, 1-3, by last-place Al's Home Service and runner-up Greaves Movers stopped Gorge Hotel by the same score in a doubleheader at Royal Athletic Park.

Walt Burrows led the Al's to their upset, going two for three at the plate, scoring once and coming up with two outstanding fielding plays. Winning-pitcher Lon Miles, who also scored a run, gained his first victory with a three-hitter, striking out six batters and walking one.

Les Brice of Greaves also made a three-hitter good for his second win and got himself started on the way with a run-scoring double in the first inning.

New Zealand Pulls Upset

AUCKLAND (Reuter) — New Zealand scored one of the Rugby League upsets of the decade when it defeated World Cup champion Australia, 24-3, on a muddy pitch here Saturday.

It was the only international in a three-game Australian tour of New Zealand. Australia defeated a New Zealand side, 35-14, in the first match of the tour Wednesday.

Mays Leading All-Star Vote

NEW YORK (AP) — There have been times in recent years when Willie Mays was selected to the National League all-star team from past performances.

But not this time.

Mays, at age 40, has put it all together again this season, hitting .308 with 13 homers and 37 runs batted in. The figures were enough to make the San Francisco Giants centrefielder the leading vote-getter for the National League all-star team with less than a week remaining in the balloting.

In the latest tally, Mays replaced catcher Johnny Bench of Cincinnati at the top of the balloting by the fans with 540,390. Bench had 527,952, with Hank Aaron of Atlanta third at 526,386.

The other leaders by positions were Willie Stargell of Pittsburgh at the other outfield position, Willie McCovey of San Francisco at first base, Glenn Beckert of Chicago at second, Bud Harrelson of New York at shortstop and Joe Torre of St. Louis at third.

The game against the American League stars will be played Tuesday night, July 13, in Detroit.

Grand Bolero Wins Feature

VANCOUVER (CP) — George Bieley's Grand Bolero led all the way to win the $8,165 Johnny Longden 6000 by a nose over Ranch Hand Stable's River Buoy Saturday at Exhibition Park.

Alandian, the only other entry in the 1 1/16 mile event, finished another 2½ lengths behind River Buoy.

The longest price of the three starters, Grand Bolero paid $6.20 and $2.50. River Buoy, the favorite, returned $2.30 to place.

Grand Bolero was ridden by Frank Inda and ran the distance over a fast track in 1:5 4-5, more than two seconds slower than the track record.

R. J. Steeves on Win Us Some also employed front-running tactics to win the supporting feature, running the six and one-half furlongs in 1:18 2-5.

Eastern Team To Play Here

An all-Indian team from St. Regis, Que., which finished second in the Canadian final in Halifax last year, will travel to Victoria for the Junior Lacrosse Centennial Tournament next weekend at Memorial Arena.

Also entered are Calgary Trojans, Saanich London Boxing Club and Victoria McDonald's Bread.

McDonald's Bread, third-place finishers at Halifax last year, beat the Quebec squad, 9-8, during the national finals and both teams have made few lineup changes from last year.

STARTS FRIDAY

The three-day tournament begins Friday night at 7 p.m. with St. Regis and Saanich London Boxing Club opening the action. Calgary and McDonald's Bread clash, starting at 9:00.

On Saturday, Saanich plays Calgary at 7 p.m. followed by a game between St. Regis and McDonald's Bread.

The two teams with the best won-lost record will enter the championship final Sunday night starting at 8 p.m. The consolation final will begin at 6:00.

TIE-BREAKER

In the event of a tie, goals-for will be used to determine the finalists.

McDonald's, coached by former Victoria Shamrock Bill Munroe, are led by Jim Lynch, Jerry Kustaski and Glen Neuman.

Saanich is coached by Ken Alexander of the current Shamrocks and have scoring stars Kevin Alexander (Ken's brother) and Bill Cool and goalkeeper Dennis McLean in the lineup.

The Calgary minor lacrosse program has been organized by Jackie Wilson, a former Victoria Shamrock and Canadian national hockey player.

Admission is $1 for adults and 50 cents for students and old age pensioners nightly. Children under 12, accompanied by an adult, admitted free.

Mitchell Pads Lead In Cleveland Open

CLEVELAND (AP) — Bobby Mitchell, seeking his first victory in six years on the pro tour, fired a 67 and stretched his lead to four strokes Saturday in the third round of the $150,000 Cleveland Open golf tournament.

Mitchell, a 28-year-old from Danville, Va., had a 54-hole total of 197, a startling 16-under-par on the 6643-yard Beechmont Country Club course.

Masters champion Charles Coody bolted into second place on the strength of a nine-under-par 62 — matching the low 18-hole round on the tour this season—for 201.

He was tied at that figure with Australian veteran Bruce Crampton, who had a third round 67 in the warm, muggy weather.

Veteran Dan Sikes, in second place one stroke away starting the day, could do no better than match par 71 for 202.

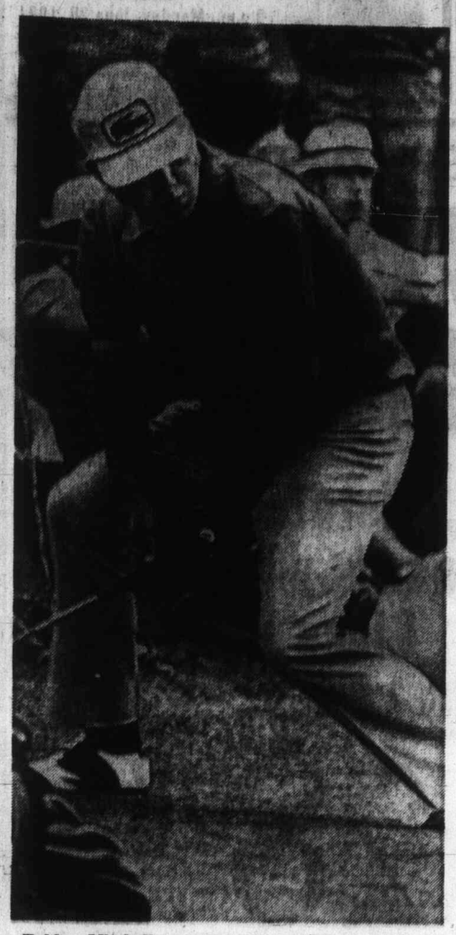

RODGERS WHIFFS

Phil Rodgers and Jerry McGee followed at 203. Each had a 67, including an embarrassing whiff for Rodgers who tried to hit left-handed from under a bush and missed the ball competely.

Billy Casper, the player of the year last season but a non-winner so far in 1971, had a 68 and headed a big group at 204, seven strokes back of the pace-setting Mitchell.

England's Tony Jacklin slipped back to a 73 for 205, and United States Open King Lee Trevino couldn't get it going, took a 71 and was far back at 209.

Big Spring

Andy Bell of Lake Cowichan, fishing with his wife Jenny, landed a 44-pound spring Saturday at Beechy Head, near Beecher Bay Marina. It was about a 45-minute struggle for Bell, who was using minnows as bait.

Rival Spectators . . .

Springboks Win Opener

. . . Clash in Stands

PERTH, Australia (CP) — The South African Springboks rugby team trounced West Australia 44-18 in the opening match of their Australian tour Saturday despite a second-half clash between rival factions of spectators inside the Perry Lakes stadium at Perth, Australia.

Fists flew on several different occasions when anti-apartheid supporters and those in favor of the Springbok tour met face to face at the southern end of the ground. The game was not interupted.

It was the only international game in a three-game Australian tour of New Zealand.

Police moved in to separate the fighters and made eight arrests.

One arrested man was semi-conscious, another had blood streaming from his nose and a third resisted police for several minutes before he could be placed in the back of a police van.

The trouble started when a splinter group of anti-apartheid supporters moved into the stadium against the wishes of the Campaign for the Abolition of Racism in Sport.

They filed in and sat at the fence. Pro-Springbok supporters among the crowd of 8,000 moved in behind them and started chanting in favor of the game.

The anti-apartheid demonstrators joined in and tempers flared.

Among the demonstrators was a West Australian University rugby star Geoff Hedstrom, who refused to play against the Springboks after being chosen for the West Australian team.

In the game itself, Hannes Viljoen scored five of South Africa's 10 tries as the touring team put on an exhilarating display of open rugby.

West Australia also had a hero—Maori Bob Thomson, who scored all their points with five penalty goals and a try.

Joanne Carner Pulls Away

EIRE, Pa. (AP) — Joanne Carner jumped to a five-stroke lead after the third round of the U.S. Women's Open golf championship Saturday, firing par 72 while defending-champion Donna Caponi stumbled to a 77 and a tie for third place.

Mary Mills, the 1963 open champion, shot a 73 for a 54-hole total of 220 behind Mrs. Carner's 215.

Mrs. Carner consistently hit drives of more than 250 yards.

Jane Blalock fired a two-over 74 for a 36-hole total of 222, tied for third with Miss Caponi.

Leading money winner Kathy Whitworth was tied for fifth with four-time open winner Mickey Wright, both are eight strokes back of Mrs. Carner at 223.

"You, too, can be a handsome dog."

Or a pretty lady. Because today's Hush Puppies come in lots of great colours. In lots of styles. For men, women and kids.
All of them different—and all of them the same. The same blissful, barefoot comfort. In breathin' brushed pigskin. Light and gentle; cool and comfortable. In leathers so soft.
Collect a litter of Hush Puppies. And live in barefoot comfort for the rest of your days.

The kids who judged our Hush Puppies Colouring Contest for Adults admitted that some of the entries weren't bad at all.

Susan E. Boorman, Port Alberni, B.C.
Marie Francis Sr., Edmonton, Alta.
Mrs. J. Whitmore, Hamilton, Ont.
Mme Gisele Carrier, Orsainville, Que.
William Hart, Dartmouth, N.S.

A cute little Basset Hound puppy that'll grow up to look like our Hush Puppies mascot. (Or the cash.)
And so, as the first Hush Puppies Colouring Contest for Adults sinks slowly into oblivion, we leave you with our blissful motto: Barefoot comfort is a litter of Hush Puppies.

Freedom Flights Threatened

Can the Statue Help Cubans?

MIAMI (UPI) — When refugees began fleeing Fidel Castro's Cuba in 1965, many brought with them a statue called Caridad de Cobre, depicting fishermen in a sailboat at the feet of a patron saint.

Legend says the fishermen were saved from a howling storm off the Cuban coast. It was deemed a miracle.

The statue was an item of faith to sustain the rough crossing of the Florida Strait to freedom in a rag-tag fleet of rafts, dinghies, and, for the fortunate ones, seaworthy fishing boats. Sometimes its power failed during the 90-mile voyage.

To many Cuban exiles here, the threat of a halt to the "freedom flights" from Cuba to Miami would signal a return to the desperate voyages across the treacherous, shark-infested Florida Strait — voyages that have claimed untold lives.

About 240,000 of Miami's 350,000 Cuban refugees have arrived here since December of 1965 on the twice-daily freedom flights which the U.S. Senate appropriation committee voted Friday to stop funding.

Miami's Cuban exile colony was stunned at the threatened cutoff of the freedom flights. Exile leaders immediately huddled and began thinking of ways to continue the exodus if Congress approves the end of the airlift.

The Miami Herald editorially supported the cutoff. Some local politicians feel Miami is strangling in a tight job market and a short supply of housing. Others, including Florida Senator Lawton Chiles and Rep. Claude Pepper, have voted to fight to maintain the refugee flights.

"There are many who just want to be liberated and raise their children in a free homeland," said Caridad Rafuls Lopez, who arrived in Miami from Cuba five days ago.

"A country like this which has opened its arms to us cannot betray us now," said Diego Morel, a 61-year-old shoeshine boy who has found a new life in Miami.

How many Cubans would have made it to the United States without the airlift? No one knows.

The U.S. Coast Guard has "recorded" 14,684 Cubans who have made it here by sea since Castro took power in 1959.

But the number of Cubans who risked a sea escape dwindled sharply with the advent of the freedom flights. Last year there were 249, in 1969 there were 340, and in 1968 some 449 refugees escaped Cuba by boat.

The number of exiles to flee their homeland reached a peak of 5,730 in 1965 when Castro opened the doors to malcontents who wanted to leave, and President Johnson took the bearded dictator up on the offer.

Compared to more than 36,000 airlift refugees arriving here each year, the number who have escaped by sea has averaged only 1,234.

Humperdinck Draws Cash For Bandits

CHERRY HILL, N.J. (UPI) — At least two bandits fled with about $100,000, most of it cash, from the Latin Casino Saturday after they bound and gagged two employees.

The money came from the receipts of the previous night's show starring singer Englebert Humperdinck.

Sleepiness: 20 Per Cent of Crashes

NEW YORK (UPI) — About 20 per cent of all traffic accidents are believed to be the result of driver sleepiness, it was reported Saturday.

According to articles in the July issue of Science Digest, 48 per cent of drivers involved in fatal car accidents in Oklahoma in the past 11 years and 40 per cent of commercial vehicle drivers involved in fatal accidents throughout the U.S. in 1969, had fallen asleep at the wheel.

The magazine said researchers who investigated the sleepy driver syndrom found three reasons for the condition:

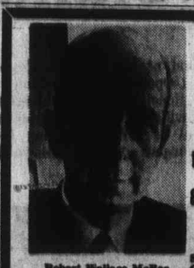

● Driving three hours without stopping. A group of Pennsylvania State University undergraduates tested experienced lapses of three or four seconds after driving several hours in a driving simulator.

● "Over-extended" driving with too little sleep, late starts and fewer and briefer rest stops. These drivers reported they often got sleepy while driving and chalked up more accidents in a driving simulator at the University of California's institute of transportation and traffic engineering.

● The medical condition known as narcolepsy which afflicts an estimated 200,000 to 300,000 Americans, causing them to fall asleep under almost any sedentary conditions. The magazine said their driving records show many more traffic accidents than those of the average driver but, once diagnosed through a test developed at the Mayo Clinic, the problem can be treated with drugs.

U.S. Navy Finds Derelict Sub

SEATTLE (AP) — The derelict submarine Bugara has been found on the ocean floor, about a mile east of where she sprang a leak and sank June 1 while under tow four miles northwest of Cape Flattery, U.S. Navy said Thursday.

Mayor Urges Tax Relief For Old Folk

Senior citizens who own property should let their MLAs know how badly they need some sort of tax relief, Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis said in an interview at week's end.

"I think it is important to keep up the pressure," the mayor said," and I hope that our senior citizens understand that it is simply not lawful for a municipality to make any change on its own. We don't have the authority, as much as we might want to."

Curtis recalled that, at his instigation, the matter had been taken up by the Union of B.C. Municipalities and had been pursued "right to our presentation to the provincial cabinet in December, 1969."

At that time, he said, Premier Bennett "was very definite in his rejection of anything such as this."

Some U.S. states re introducing this type of property tax abatement or relief for deferral in a vatriety of forms, the mayor continued, "and I'm confident that it will spread."

"But again, there is no magic formula for an individual city council to implement. I intend to keep pressing for it and supporting all who feel the same way."

Enabling legislation can come only from the provincial legislature, Curtis pointed out, "and I'm sure that if we keep up the pressure, it will come."

It is an area here individual senior citizens property-owners could do much to achieve that goal by writing their MLAs and letting them know how badly they need the assistance, the mayor said.

Hams Camping Out

Annual Test Of Gear

About 50 area radio hams are camping out for 24 hours at Geoff Mitchell's Sea Bluff farm, Metchosin on an annual exercise in which they test equipment and procedures.

The event which started at noon, Saturday, called Field Day and held annually except for the war years since 1933, is sponsored by the bi-national amateur radio organization, the American Radio Relay League.

The exercise is held as a contest in which small groups and clubs compete against one another.

The hams will be testing equipment and procedures which they use to help such agencies as the Red Cross, Civil Defence, police and public utilities when normal communications are disrupted by disasters such as floods, earthquakes and fires.

Most of the amateurs will operate equipment from their cars or from gasoline-driven electric generators, just as they would if power should fail during a real emergency.

Last year a total of 11,762 hams throughout North America took part using 3,259 transmitters which obtained 753,765 contacts.

Emergency power is being supplied by two 10,000-watt portable generators, lent by Civil Defence and national defence department.

Victoria Short-wave Club, in charge of the weekend operation, hopes to improve the score obtained two years ago when 1,751 contacts were made, putting the club at the top of its class in Canada.

Last year the radio hams encountered 30-mile-an-hour winds which lashed the site of their Field Day. Saturday's weather was much more favorable as the amatuers put up tents or arrived in campers.

Ernie Wilson of 4520 Bissenden took his son Bill, 13, and a friend, Al Thompson, 14, of 4524 Duart out to Metchosin and helped the two young hams set up their tent.

Court's Take for Day: $5 Fine, $3.50 Costs

The accused was outnumbered 10 to one in Victoria Provincial Court Saturday morning.

At 10 a.m. Judge H. E. Alder, city prosecutor John Macintyre, a court clerk, a court officer, one reporter and a few spectators were in court for the days proceedings.

At one minute past the hour, a second reporter arrived in court in time to watch the judge leave, as court adjourned until Monday. The only case on the docket was one man arrested for failing to pay a traffic ticket for a meter violation.

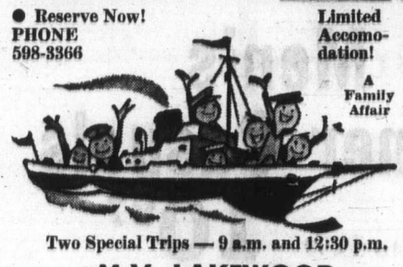

Total take for the court for the day was his $5 fine and $3.50 court costs.

"Do you realize that we're all here this morning just for your benefit?", Macintyre later asked the accused.

Seasoned policemen were scratching their heads later in the day trying to remember a shorter court list, but were unsuccessful.

Shortage of accused persons in court may have been because of the police work-to-rule campaign which began May 26 in Victoria. Saanich police later joined the campaign, started in protest against failure of the city and Saanich to agree to a contract with them.

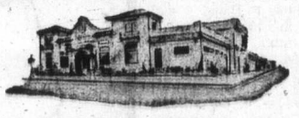

Since that time arrests have been cut to a minimum, with police officers giving roadside suspensions instead of arresting impaired drivers, allowing drunks to sleep overnight in jail, instear of night in jail, instead of charging them with causing a disturbance, and other means which deprive the city of revenue from fines.

Canada's Role

Trudeau Cracks Neutral Belief

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau has dealt a blow to the 17-year-old myth that Canada is a neutral on the International Control Commission in Vietnam.

The myth had persisted despite all evidence to the contrary.

During a question-and-answer session with a general audience at Aurora, Ont., Tuesday night, Trudeau said Canada's Western alignment was clear when it was selected as a member of the three-nation commission in 1954.

As the Western-aligned nation on the commission, Canada in good conscience could carry messages for the United States to Hanoi — and did so in 1964-65. Poland carried similar messages to Hanoi on behalf of the Russians.

The record tends to bear him out.

In 1952, Canada sided with India in writing a commission report that Communist North Vietnam, almost from the time of the 1954 armistice, had infiltrated and subverted South Vietnam. Poland dissented from the report.

In 1965, India and Poland condemned the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam, Canada disented, saying the U.S. had been provoked into retaliation. Publication of secret U.S. Pentagon papers have sharply shaken that conclusion by showing former president Lyndon Johnson had long-drawn plans for bombing.

In early 1964, then prime minister Lester Pearson agreed that Canada's senior representative on the commission, J. Blair Seaborn, bear American messages to Hanoi.

This was a handy channel of communication because as a commissioner Seaborn journeyed regularly from Saigon to Hanoi.

During his year in Vietnam, Seaborn made six visits to Hanoi on five of which he carried messages for the U.S. to the North Vietnamese.

It was generally believed — and secret Pentagon papers now confirm that Seaborn was acting as a messenger for the U.S. though the Canadian government at the time would not acknowledge it officially.

DOES THE HIGH COST OF DYING OFFEND YOU?

Are you one of the thoughtful ones who is concerned that your relatives may be swept with emotion into paying hundreds too much for your funeral, when such money could be put to far better use among the living? Are you disturbed by costly caskets, displaying of remains, etc.? Would you like to sit down in complete privacy with a form we will mail you, and record NOW exactly what type of funeral or memorial service you would like . . . whether you wish friends to send flowers or donate to a charity of your choice . . . whether you would like to donate your eyes or other tissue to help the living? Would you like to see MAXIMUM funeral costs in print, instead of MINIMUMS? This is not a society for the poor. The provincial government has moved to curb the incomes and set standards of performance for certain segments of the B.C. medical profession.

To some doctors, it will be taken as a most radical intervention of what they say are entrepreneural rights.

However, sources in the medical profession point out the provincial government knows that if the public ever discovered there are doctors who work only three or four hours a day and earn $60,000 or $70,000 a year there would be a rebellion against the entire health system which, despite its frailty, is still a political asset.

The government's action is in the form of an order-in-council, approved last week, that likely will result in some private medical laboratories going out of business.

The Medical Services Commission, which administers the prepaid medical insurance plans in B.C., will have the power to licence laboratories after it has inspected their services, ownership and location.

The present work, under contract to Farmer Construction Ltd., will correct the hospital's most pressing deficiencies but hospital officials have two more phases that they hope will follow the current improvement program, expected to be finished next March.

The largest parts of the present contract involve replacing 24-bed wards with units of four beds or less. Also involved will be improvements to nurses' stations and storage facilities.

While patients have been moved to other parts of the hospital to make room for the construction crews, there has been no serious disruption to the care being given veterans of the First and Second World Wars, said Hemmings.

For several years, the hospital has been concerned that while it has excellent equipment — some of its monitoring, operating room and diagnostic devices were

Government Curb on Incomes and Standards

Some Private Medical Labs May Vanish

By JOHN MATTERS

The provincial government has moved to curb the incomes and set standards of performance for certain segments of the B.C. medical profession.

To some doctors, it will be taken as a most radical intervention of what they say are entrepreneural rights.

However, sources in the medical profession point out the provincial government knows that if the public ever discovered there are doctors who work only three or four hours a day and earn $60,000 or $70,000 a year there would be a rebellion against the entire health system which, despite its frailty, is still a political asset.

The government's action is in the form of an order-in-council, approved last week, that likely will result in some private medical laboratories going out of business.

The Medical Services Commission, which administers the prepaid medical insurance plans in B.C., will have the power to licence laboratories after it has inspected their services, ownership and location.

The first set inspections will involve those laboratories that depend heavily on routine blood and urine studies, as well as bacteriological work, for their income.

In some cases, those will be the laboratories just across the corridor from one's family doctor. Even officials of the B.C. Medical Association admit that the proximity is not a coincidence.

After that will come the inspections and licencing of privately-operated x-ray offices and electrodiagnostic centres. Electrodiagnostic laboratories are places that take measurements of such things as heart and brain performance and frequently those, too, are just across the corridor from one's doctor.

One may go to his doctor complaining of fatigue and headaches and the doctor may suspect anemia. However, the doctor will want this confirmed and will need a blood study.

Because most doctors do not have the necessary equipment in their offices, they will send the patient to a laboratory.

In a city such as Victoria, the doctor has a choice of laboratory such as that at Royal Jubilee or St. Joseph's hospitals or the privately-owned laboratory that may be down the hall.

Apart from the government's annoyance over the fact that the private laboratory may be partly owned by the very doctor who sent the patient there, it is also concerned about the quality of the work it does.

It is highly likely, for example, that a private laboratory that does 10 hemoglobin studies a day would not be as accurate with its results as one that does 100. The volume of work would require a hospital laboratory to have more refined equipment and more expert staff than the lab down the hallway from a doctor's office.

Apart from its concern over quality — and the medical profession for some time has been trying to deal with this — the government is worried about the costs, say sources in both the government and private medicine.

The private laboratory sends its bill to the medicare plan to which the patient subscribes. However, the fact is that medicare is largely financed by government funds — and every administration in the world is worried about health costs.

Nevertheless, it is exceedingly annoying to government when it discovers that the private laboratory whose income is mainly from medicare is flourishing in a community where the hospital laboratories are not working to capacity.

Taxpayers Pay Less For Hospital Tests

That is why some private laboratories might find themselves without a licence on Oct. 1 and the patients normally dispatched to those places instead will be going to institutions such as Royal Jubilee and St. Joseph's for their testing.

In addition to finding out that many hospital laboratories are not working to their capacities, sources say the government has discovered that the large volumes done by hospitals make it possible to do tests at lower unit cost.

In most cases, the cost to the taxpayer of a test done in a hospital laboratory is less than that billed medicare by a privately-owned laboratory.

This, however, awaits proof, which may be established when the government exercises its power under the cabinet order to inspect the records of private laboratories.

When the cabinet order was announced last week, Provincial Secretary Wesley Black acknowledged efforts by the B.C. Medical Association, which represents most of the doctors in the province, to reduce costs.

"The medical association has shared our concern over the rising utilization and costs of laboratory services," he said.

Dr. W. J. Corbett of North Vancouver, president of the BCMA, said Saturday night there was no quarrel with the government's position as a method of increasing efficiency but if it impeded access to quality there would be a protest.

The BCMA is involved because it and the medical Services Commission negotiate the fees that doctors can collect for treatments given to medicare subscribers. Last year, there were about 14 million such treatments in B.C.

The medical association, whose contract with the government expired last Dec. 31, decided there would be a moratorium on any fee increases for at least one year. The result is that doctors are now trying to negotiate a new agreement with the government.

Corbett indicated Saturday that little progress has been made despite the numerous meetings that have been held in Victoria.

That means if the operators of private medical laboratories find the government's position intolerable, and can persuade colleagues that it is unacceptable, last week's order-in-council may have an effect on negotiations.

The reaction to the cabinet order of the radiologists who operate privately-owned x-ray laboratories and the doctors who run electro-diagnostic centres also could influence negotiations between the government and all of the doctors who practice in B.C.

However, radiologists say their position is much different from that of the pathologists who run laboratories. A pathologist can exist in only a supervisory capacity while a radiologist must examine each exposed film. A doctor specializing in x-ray diagnosis cannot rely on a technician or a machine for an evaluation.

However, radiologists also say they are not excitedly anticipating the effects of the cabinet order.

While patients have been moved to other parts of the hospital to make room for the construction crews, there has been no serious disruption to the care being given veterans of the First and Second World Wars, said Hemmings.

For several years, the hospital has been concerned that while it has excellent equipment — some of its monitoring, operating room and diagnostic devices were the first of their kind on Vancouver Island — the structure that houses them is archaic.

First Nonuplets Greek?

SALONIKA, Greece — Two professors at Salonika University have challenged the claim that the nine babies born to an Australian woman recently were the first nonuplets in history.

Theodore Edippidis and Vassilios Koutsoyannapoulos quoted Archbishop Eustache of Salonika who lived in the 16th century and spoke of a case of nonuplets in his writings.

Eustache said nine babies were born to the wife of a prominent man from the Pelopones in southern Greece. He said they all survived, although he failed to say how long.

He said the mother of the nonuplets feared fellow citizens would call her a "pig-woman" for giving birth to so many children at once and gave orders that seven of the children be thrown from a bridge into a river.

The babies were rescued by their father, he wrote. For this reason the children were named Gefyoi, meaning bridge, the professors quoted the archbishop as saying.

Cruise to Mexico or the Caribbean with the people who invented ocean cruising.
This winter you can enjoy the physical and mental refreshment of a one-week or three-week warm water cruise on the steamship line that invented the whole idea. You'll live it up amid 3 swimming pools, 5 open decks and with people who speak your language — for as little as $26 a day.
2 Winter Cruises to Mexico from US$ 385.
Seven days. S.S. Oriana leaves San Francisco November 28 on our La Fiesta Cruise and December 11 on our El Cortez Cruise for Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta and Acapulco. One P&O ticket buys a full 11 days transportation, room, meals and entertainment.
2 Winter Cruises to the Caribbean from US$ 820.
Or sail on Oriana December 21 on our Christmas Cruise or January 20 on our Carnival Cruise for a three-week cruise of the Caribbean via Puerto Vallarta and The Panama Canal. The Dec. 24 cruise calls at Barbados, Martinique, St. Thomas, and Curacao. Jan. 23 cruise visits Grenada, Barbados, St. Thomas and the tip of Venezuela. Return via Acapulco. For information or reservations, contact your travel agent or P&O, the British Cruise Line, 409 Granville Street, Vancouver 2, B.C. (604) 682-3811.

Deterrent to Motorists

Laser Clocks Speed

CAMBRIDGE, England (CP) — Another deterrent is on its way to stop motorists speeding. A laser beam speedmeter, developed by a research organization in Cambridge, is "a foolproof method of catching speeding drivers," claims Dr. Bohdan Watrasiewicz, the trap inventor. The meter, which casts a beam across a road, records the car's exact speed when it crosses the laser's ray.

Funen's Faborg is charming town

Danish Isles Lovely

By GORDON IRVING
Copley News Service

SEALAND, Denmark — The islands of Denmark, all 500 of them, are part of the charm of this little European nation probably because only a hundred of them are inhabited.

They come in all shapes and sizes, and nearly all shelter behind the land mass of Jutland, in the waters of the Kattegat and the Baltic.

Any tourist to Scandinavia will find the names of the Danish islands rolling lovingly off his tongue, like Langeland and Lolland, Falster and Bornholm, Christianso and Funen.

"Too many visitors miss the islands because they concentrate on cities like Copenhagen," says a Danish Tourist Board official. "Yet a vacation on a Danish island can be quite relaxing. There are forests and parks, castles and manors, and streams wind through lush meadows. The little towns on our islands are friendly, and the residents love to welcome visitors."

The island of Funen is especially welcoming, and its scenery, the Danes claim, has even influenced the character of the people who live there. Hans Christian Andersen, the famous writer of fairy tales, was born in Odense, a town on Funen, and Carl Nielsen's music reflects the happy Funen landscape.

Hotel Building Boom

Tourists Pack Spain

LONDON (AP) — In Spain, they expect to have more tourists than Spaniards in 1975.

London, with 920 hotels in the city centre, is planning a square mile of new hotels with 220,000 more beds by 1980.

Brussels has 10 new hotels going up and 11 more on planning boards; Paris needs 6,000 more rooms; Yugoslavia is building 49 new hotels and planning underground parking in once sleepy Dubrovnik. Moscow boasts of the ultimate tourist kick, the new Rossiya Hotel with 6,000 beds.

Britain had a million visitors from overseas in 1960, more than six million last year. A recent official estimate predicts between 12 million and 15 million in 1980. Spain, with seven million tourists in 1961 and 24 million last year, expects 38 million in 1975. The current population of Spain is about 33 million.

To move the planeloads of eager sightseers smoothly from the Arc de Triomphe to the Roman Forum, from the Berlin Wall to the Acropolis, more and more hotels were needed. No new hotel had opened in Paris since the George V was finished in the 1930s until the Paris Hilton threw open its doors in 1966.

For the last 10 years, though, giant cranes hovering over the capitals of Europe have signalled the birth of scores of new hotels.

The tourist invasion has reached to Finland on the edge of the Arctic Circle. Sixteen hotels are going up in Helsinki and main tourist centres at the moment, and the country's hotel beds will be increased from 44,000 at present to 55,000 in 1973.

The Soviet Union has 52 hotels, motels and camping sites under construction in 45 cities, but a tourist official said: "We need many, many more."

The situation is much better in Romania. Sixty new hotels were built there last year.

The Greater London Council, after a study of hotels and tourism in London, pointed out that "if current forecasts are fulfilled, there may be, by the end of the decade, on any one day, a million visitors in London."

Getting Away from It All

By STAN DELAPLANE

PARIS — "Copenhagen is where it's at this summer." That's the word spreading among the under-30 kids. And the Danish tourist people aren't sure whether they like it or not.

Passport figures show that of every 10 Americans coming to Europe in the next three months, four will be under 30. The estimate is 750,000. Beards, guitars; lots of enthusiasm, not much money.

This doesn't count the young Europeans and Australians and Canadians. Britain is TRYING to get ready for 3 million of the knapsack crowd!

The rush usually starts in mid-May. But this year the early birds flew over in April. Most of them are on $200 charters and casual $2 to $5 a day budgets.

What can they expect? Hostels with double-bunk beds — but not enough of them. London is frantically trying to set up a 1,000-bed camp site. Prices are running $1.20 to $1.75. Copenhagen opened a 250-bed hostel in a deserted factory. Price: $1.90.

They've also begun publishing a newspaper — Use It. Tells young visitors about Danish drug laws and available hotels.

□

Last year it was Amsterdam. One reason, there was a lot of marijuana floating around. And Dutch police were simply overwhelmed by the number of young people.

□

"Our daughter of college age is determined to go to Europe, and we are certainly worried . . ."

You might tell her she'll have a lot more fun if she goes with a couple of friends. I talked to a bunch of kids last summer, and they all agreed on that. A loner has a lot of lonesome times.

□

The student identification card is important! Cut-rate excursion rides. Entry to the cheaper student hostels. Lot of free things, like museums. Tourist people here say Americans run out of money faster than Europeans. Because they start with a very vague idea that things are going to be cheaper than they really are.

□

Figure Europe is going to be jammed! It took all the juice I could raise to get into a Paris hotel today. They are whacking us $50 a day for two. And it's a room you couldn't rent for $10 at home.

□

I couldn't get on an airplane to Bordeaux. No seats. It's hard to find a table at a sidewalk cafe. If you want to rent a car, you'd better ask a coupe of weeks in advance.

□

This is going to be true of the most popular cities: Paris, London, Rome. The countryside may be better — except at the most wanted resorts. Lot of room in Ireland in the country. Portugal and Spain should be good if you go the smaller villages on the Atlantic coast. The resort places — Costa Brava, southern coast of France — are going to be impossible for walk-in travellers.

□

Tourist offices in the towns keep a list of hotel openings. Go there first if you have no reservation.

Americans Open Their Hearts to Victim

Man Without Face Reborn

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Peter Mikioulis, the victim of a vicious attack by hogs while still an infant in the Greek village of Arcadia, grew up to become "the man without a face".

With no nose or upper lip, Mikioulis was an object of pity and revulsion. Outside of his family, he avoided personal contracts, living a life of obscurity.

There were several attempts to surgically reconstruct Mikioulis' face in Greece and in a number of European countries, but none succeeded.

Then, 18 months ago, following a visit to an uncle in Detroit, he came to the University of Michigan medicat centre here.

Today, Mikioulis, at 36, has a visage he no longer must hide. It's not "pretty," say U-M plastic surgeons, but his new appearance will no longer stand in the way of his leading a normal life.

Mikioulis arrived here shy, sensitive, impoverished and unable to speak English. He faced months of hospital stay and thousands of dollars in medical costs.

Surgeons in the U-M department of plastic surgery waived their fees. The Ann Arbor Greek community virtually adopted Mikioulis and raised $6,000 to pay for his initial hospital care.

An appeal made in a local newspaper, describing the plight of "the man without a face," brought another $9,000 in public contributions.

Doctors, using skin grafts, gave Mikioulis a profile for the first time. The nose and upper lip he lost while napping in his crib outside his parents' farmhouse were replaced.

The plastic surgeons completed the task without as much as a photo or description to work from, although Mikioulis had told them he wanted a "Greek-type, rather large nose."

"There is quite a bit of scar tissue (remaining), the appearance of which will improve in time," one physician said. "However, his face now should allow him to take his place in society, hold a job and lead a normal life."

Pelletier 'Has To Go'

OTTAWA (CP) — Liberal MP Ralph Stewart, furious over administration of the government's Opportunities for Youth program, demanded Friday the resignation of Secretary of State Gerard Pelletier.

"The secretary of state has got to go," the member for the Ontario riding of Cochrane said.

The $25 million summer youth program was "the fiasco of the decade." Pelletier had entrusted it to people incapable of analysing the needs of Canadians.

Stewart said he was particularly irritated because a recreation project at Smooth Rock Falls, Ont., in his constituency, had been approved by Pelletier's department and then cancelled.

Stewart alleged that radicals who once infiltrated the Company of Young Canadians now are working on the youth program.

Raw Sewage Floods Erie

CLEVELAND, Ohio (UPI) — Health officials watched for contamination of drinking water and closed beaches from here to the Pennsylvania border Saturday while 5 million gallons an hour of raw sewage from a disabled treatment plant gushed into Lake Erie.

Police, Troops Match Protestants in Parade

BELFAST (Reuter) — About 3,000 militant Protestants led by the militant Rev. Ian Paisley marched through the city today to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Northern Ireland Parliament.

The marchers were guarded by nearly as many police and British troops who quickly broke up a few scuffles with Roman Catholics.

Power Struggle

Skyline dilemma may be high wires or highrises in high-density and elegant areas of Greater Victoria

By JOHN MATTERS

B.C. Hydro has maps that show high-voltage transmission systems running through some of the most densely-populated and elegant areas of Victoria and Saanich within the next 10 years.

According to those drawings, new lines will be needed to increase the load from Goward substation in Saanich to Horsey substation, which is near the Ingraham Hotel on Douglas Street.

From Horsey, the power will be fed to the existing George Tripp substation in Saanich and to new ones likely to be built on Kings Road near Veterans Hospital and in the Gordon Head area.

There is uncertainty as to whether sets of conductors will run between Kings Road and Gordon Head and Tripp and Horsey, but such lines would be a great asset if Hydro had to suddenly reroute power because of trouble in any of the system's segments.

Hydro says its planning for these lines is not firm since changes in load growth patterns over the next 10 years would influence the final decisions. Officials deny that they are vague because of the right-of-way controversy that has occurred in the Highlands district and Munns Road area.

Power Load To Multiply

Nevertheless, the most reliable indicator of the degree to which Hydro would expand its Victoria distribution and transmissions system is its own projections of load growth.

It appears inevitable that Hydro will need many miles of widened right-of-way over which to string power lines.

The present load is 250 megawatts, which by 1975 will have increased to 405 and by 1980, just nine years away, to 675 megawatts. The nine-year growth would be 275 per cent.

In addition to a larger rainbow of electrical gadgetry which, naturally, would increase the load, there also is the factor of the number of persons buying and using that equipment.

In municipal areas, population densities are greatly influenced by the policies of local councils. Abandoning detached housing, for example, and replacing it with townhouses or apartments increases populttion and therefore the demand for electricity.

However, the economic reality that is of great interest to Hydro in its right-of-way acquisitions is that the market value of land rises at a greater rate than does the intensification of its use.

In Vancouver's West End, the forest of high rises have an average of 105 persons on each acre. In contrast, most parts of Saanich would have a density of between .2 and five persons per acre.

No Guaranteed Underground

So there emerge two reasons why Hydro's distribution and transmission system west of Burrard Street to Stanley Park in Vancouver is underground: there are adequate customers to pay for the expensive installation and the width of right-of-way needed for overhead lines is more expensive than that required for an underground service.

"Supposing we wanted to put a transmission line through a densely-settled area," says C. W. Nash, Hydro's manager of corporate services. "To put it through would require buying dozens of high-cost properties.

"As far as the Gordon Head and Kings Road transmission circuits, we are not prepared to say what the conditions will be. Where land use is dense, and where acquisition of right-of-way through that area becomes prohibitively expensive, we may have no choice but to go underground."

In other words, Hydro is not guaranteeing an underground system, and neither is it saying that towers or poles will march through those residential districts, some of them the most expensive and best-manicured — in the Captial Region outside of the Uplands.

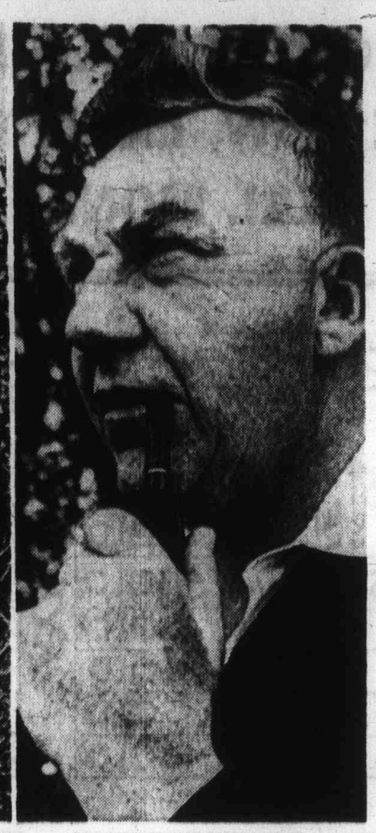

It is an obvious and cheeky over-simplification, but still an index of the dilemma, to say that the choice in Victoria and Saanich during the next nine years may be three lines of Hydro towers or highrise apartments.

However, the choice is not as difficult for the transmission system that will carry 138,000 volts from Pike Lake substation, to be built on a surprisingly large plot of 80 acres at the end of Munns Road, to Sidney or Central Saanich.

Short Changed And Alternatives

In any case, it will be an overhead line, probably on steel towers.

—Barry Casson

Survey markers tipped off McSorley on Hydro's activity; Jenkins, right, may be left with unusable corner

Day may not be far away when people will be so fed up with environmental disruption of new dams and overhead lines that the agency might have to adopt a conservative attitude toward electrical energy

Pat Codyre, who has been struggling with Hydro for 14 months over the expropriation of his home and four acres at 1890 Munns Road, from time to time puts his sharp tongue in his cheek.

As a sequel to Dr. Gordon Shrum drinking a glass of the herbicide 2, 4, 5-T to prove that it's harmless, Codyre suggests the Hydro chairman eat power pylons to demonstrate their innocuousness.

Codyre claims that not only would Hydro short change him on his land, needed for yet another transmission line from Pike Lake substation to Goward, but there were alternatives to expropriating it.

He says Hydro should have given him "like for like," which means it should have replaced his home and four acres with a similar site. Hydro points out that this would only mean displacing someone else, which would not be fair either.

Hydro explains that it went about the acquisition of the Codyre property as it does for each privately-owned parcel needed for the crown agency's purposes.

"First, it is our responsibility to study load requirements," says Nash. "We then determine the necessary transmission facilities and the alternates for routes. Then we confer with the regional board and the municipalities involved for their advice.

"Then we decide on a location for the line, approach the property-owners who are affected."

Still Avenue For Settlement

Hydro's land department makes an appraisal that is in reference to "fair market value" and the value of similar property sales in the neighborhood. On that basis, it makes an offer, "which includes an amount for dislocation in cases in which the property owner has to move."

An attempt is made to settle by negotiation but if that is not possible Hydro applies to the cabinet for an expropriation order.

"By whatever method, after expropriation there is still an avenue for settlement by negotiation," says Nash. "When this fails, the government may be asked to appoint an evaluator, who would determine the compensation to be paid.

"He notifies both parties of his decision. If that is unsatisfactory to any party, it may be appealed to a judge."

Such an appeal has been launched by B.C. Hydro in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Borden, 2144 Ferndale, who owned five acres that has been expropriated by the crown agency on Munns Road. The government evaluator said Hydro should pay $13,500 for the land on which its previous, highest offer was $7,500.

In addition to Pat and Marie Codyre and the Bordens, Hydro is tangling with a third Munns Road property owner. He is Malcolm McSorley, 2100 Munns Road, from whom Hydro wants to acquire five acres of a 36-acre holding.

McSorley, embittered by Hydro first cutting trees on his property without first asking him (Hydro denies it), or later compensating him, has had an expropriation order served on him, but he will fight it.

This property is needed for the line running north from Pike Lake substation. Also expropriated for that line were the 12.7 acres and home of Knud Poulson, who lived on Prospect Lake Road.

Hydro's C. W. Nash:

'Where acquisition of right-of-way . . . becomes prohibitively expensive, we may have no choice but to go underground'

Highlands Hostile

However, the largest block of hostility lies in the Highlands district, where there are nine property owners who feel they have been adversely affected by Hydro acquiring land to widen an existing right-of-way that will feed power from generating sites to the Pike Lake substation.

The most outspoken in the group has been Aubrey Jenkins, 3025 Glen Lake Road, who says Hydro's proposed lines will leave him with a small, unusable corner of property that the authority should pay for. He also has complained about Hydro's brusqueness.

Early in May, officials of Hydro's land department came to Victoria to meet with Jenkins and Robert Brotherston, who also has represented the other owners.

(Hydro says an invitation was issued in local newspapers for anyone with a complaint to meet the manager of its lands department in Victoria but no one but Jenkins and Brotherston showed up.)

Jenkins says they talked for more than an hour about the case of an owner who has 2-10th of an acre expropriated by Hydro, which offered $50 for the parcel.

"A recognized Victoria appraiser appointed by cabinet order suggested $200 and even, at present-day values, this is subject to challenge," he added. "However, the difference between a Hydro offer and that of a recognized real estate appraiser amounts to 400 per cent and this is only on the small sum of $50.

Jenkins points out that the owner is taking the evaluation before a judge for adjudication.

Good Record In Acquisition

Despite the collisions that have occurred in the Greater Victoria area, Hydro feels that it has a fairly good public relations record when it comes to land acquisitions.

During four years, the agency made more than 4,000 acquisitions of which only 135, or 3.5 per cent, went to expropriation. Of those, only 19, or 0.5 per cent of the total, went to a hearing before a judge.

Those statistics were issued by Hydro in October, 1970.

The five disputes in the Greater Victoria area are not likely to change the statistical pattern but they undoubtedly have reminded the crown agency that not everyone will bow and scrape to it.

Hydro's argument that new and larger power lines are needed to keep pace with the demand for electricity is well-known. However, it can be questioned as to whether its customers must consume electricity at the present rate of increase.

Hydro very actively promotes its products but the day may not be far away when people will be so fed up with the environmental disruption of new dams and overhead lines that the agency might have to adopt a conservative attitude toward electrical energy.

In addition to environmental issues, there are matters such as expropriations, especially in places such as Victoria, where the Highlands and Munns Road episodes have illustrated that landowners here may have unique attitudes of possessiveness and suspicion.

Lost in Transit: Tall Grass, Fingertips, $5,700

For the first time in 22 years, he was cutting a lawn, now at a home into which he moved last Dec. 15 at 4144 North Road, Victoria.

Until that time he had lived on 12.7 acres on Prospect Lake Road, where the Poulsens let the wild grasses grow. On July 1, 1948, Mr. and Mrs. Poulsen had decided such a place in the country was where they wanted to raise their family and later retire.

Lawnmowers, the Poulsens hoped, might never be needed.

Then, B.C. Hydro decided it needed their land and expropriated it.

In terms of B.C. Hydro strategy, the fact that the Poulsens didn't have a manicured lawn at 4254 Prospect Lake Road could be taken to indicate the Crown agency was generous when it paid $34,300 for the property to make room for a power line.

Last week, Poulsen mentioned the recent lawnmower accident as something incidental to the expropriation but he pointed out that it likely would have never happened if he was still in his old home, where life was quiet and easy and the grass was tall.

The case of the Poulsens bring to four the number of B.C. Hydro expropriations in the Munns Road area.

Knud Poulsen got a letter from B.C. Hydro, dated last Sept. 23, that noted it was unlikely an agreement on a purchase price could be reached and an expropriation order would be sought from the cabinet.

On Sept. 30, he was visited by a sheriff's officer with an expropriation order that was dated Sept. 24.

Poulsen became alarmed, he says, not only by the speed of the events but also by the fact that a sheriff delivered the order. A carpenter, he was unfamiliar with such procedures and was particularly worried by the sheriff's involvement. He recalled that an expropriation order to another area resident was delivered by someone from B.C. Hydro.

Expropriation Recipe:

Aftertaste: Bitter

As a result, he went to a lawyer, who engaged an appraiser. The appraiser's nine-page report says a personal inspection of the land and judgments based on other B.C. Hydro purchases in the area led him to suggest a price of $39,900, or rounded off at $40,000.

"We take the position that no proper inference of value can be taken from other B.C. Hydro purchases," replied Hydro lawyer P. C. Tynan last Oct. 23.

In any case, it developed that a meeting was arranged between Hydro and Poulsen's lawyers. Poulsen wanted to be there but he was told to remain in the waiting room of his lawyer's office, where he sat for two hours.

"I don't think that was fair," says Poulsen. "At no time did I get in on that discussion."

When it was over, he was offered $34,300, which was $800 more than Hydro's original offer of $33,500. He says his lawyer suggested he sign the agreement because there wasn't a hope of getting more.

He signed the agreement, first striking out references that indicated he was satisfied.

Poulsen, who was in the Canadian navy during the Second World War, was paid less than $1,600 an acre for his land, which he says was worth at least $3,000. He noted that neighbors got $2,500 an acre.

After getting a copy of the agreement on which Poulsen had struck out statements that said he was satisfied, Hydro's lawyer noted the amendment and wrote to Poulsen's lawyer:

"From our discussion, I understand the settlement is to amount to satisfaction from a legal point of view but we accept your client's indication of dissatisfaction, which we can only regret."

Despite the expropriation, the Poulsens have very warm memories of their 22½ years on Prospect Lake Road. They raised four children there, the youngest of whom is about to graduate from high school.

Ten years ago, when the space defence centre started keeping tabs on all satellites circling the earth, there were only 40 "targets" aloft to worry about.

As it nears the start of its second decade on Thursday, the centre, housed deep within Colorado's Cheyanne mountain, now catalogs 2,358 man-made orbiting objects, 459 of them payloads, with the remaining 1,899 classed as debris.

The enormous task of detecting, identifying and tracking space targets and determining where they will be in the future and when they will burn up on re-entry requires 12,000 to 16,000 observations daily.

The thousands of bits of information that tell the continuing story of each orbiting object are channeled to the underground headquarters of the North American Air Defence Command at Colorado Springs by NORAD's space detection and tracking system, or SPADATS.

Inside the mountain headquarters the reports go to the space defence centre, which is staffed by the 400-man first aerospace control squadron of the U.S. Air Force's Aerospace Defence command.

The squadron is commanded by Col. Stanton G. Daries who believes the chances are remote that orbiting objects will endanger future space flights for scores of years to come.

U.S. Tracking 2,358 Satellites

By MARVIN MILES
Colonist-Los Angeles Times Service

Ten years ago, when the space defence centre started keeping tabs on all satellites circling the earth, there were only 40 "targets" aloft to worry about.

As it nears the start of its second decade on Thursday, the centre, housed deep within Colorado's Cheyanne mountain, now catalogs 2,358 man-made orbiting objects, 459 of them payloads, with the remaining 1,899 classed as debris.

The enormous task of detecting, identifying and tracking space targets and determining where they will be in the future and when they will burn up on re-entry requires 12,000 to 16,000 observations daily.

The thousands of bits of information that tell the continuing story of each orbiting object are channeled to the underground headquarters of the North American Air Defence Command at Colorado Springs by NORAD's space detection and tracking system, or SPADATS.

Inside the mountain headquarters the reports go to the space defence centre, which is staffed by the 400-man first aerospace control squadron of the U.S. Air Force's Aerospace Defence command.

The squadron is commanded by Col. Stanton G. Daries who believes the chances are remote that orbiting objects will endanger future space flights for scores of years to come.

"Right now the odds are calculated at about a million to one against such a collision," he says, "but if man continues to put up rocket bodies and other hardware for another 100 years, this debris could be a definite threat."

Daries says that improved launch vehicles and launch successes have shown that more working satellites can be lofted with fewer pieces of junk in their wake.

The centre commander pointed out that America's first space station — Skylab in 1973 — will be docked in a space belt now containing hundreds of earth-circling objects.

"The Space Defence Centre will have to give the National Aeronautics and Space Administration the location of a safe parking space," he says, "and we'll have to inform technicians aboard when orbiting objects are close to them."

One of the best ways to reduce the chances of collision and perhaps the loss of crewmen, he says, would be an international agreement to reserve a special belt around the earth for manned space travel.

As its name denotes, the Space Defence Centre's primary mission is to provide NORAD's commander-in-chief with up-to-date information called "threat data" pertaining to space defence and ballistic missile detection, just as he receives information from the sea and air areas.

Daries says advancements in space flight and the development of more sophisticated missile systems, such as multiple-warhead vehicles, will impose a more demanding work load on space watching systems.

"NORAD will need a larger space computation centre with computers capable of putting out more data faster," he adds, "plus better radar equipment to observe satellites at greater ranges."

Champ Finds Wins Tough

By RAY KERR

Duncan Suttles of Vancouver may be the Canadian chess champion, but he isn't finding the going easy in Northwest chess circles.

After a mediocre performance in Seattle Winter Open a while back, where he finished fifth, Suttles, 25, went to Portland's Rose City Open last weekend with great expectations.

But the best he could do in a field of 71 Northwest masters and experts was a tie for first place with two others — Canadian Olympic star Elod Macskasy of Vancouver and Portland's so-so expert Bill Kiplinger.

All three scored 6-1 in the three-day, seven-round event, recognized as one of the Northwest's top attractions of the season.

And Suttles is still looking for his first clear victory on the U.S. tournament trail since resuming his visits across the border some six months ago.

This showing is surprising, since Suttles is in a class by himself, and should win practically every Northwest tournament he enters.

It's not that simple, however. As he told me recently in Vancouver, "It's often hard to get up for smaller tournaments.

"What I mean is that when I play in the Olympics against some of the leading players in the world, there's plenty of incentive. But when I play in the Northwest, that incentive is often lacking."

The answer, of course, is to have Suttles entered in as many international tournaments as possible. But that requires financial support which — at the moment — is non-existent.

Some day, maybe . . .

While Suttles could have and should have done better and Macskasy redeemed, himself for some of his latter lapses, B.C. champion Peter Biyiasas of Vancouver didn't even place among the top 10.

He suffered a 23-move defeat at the hands of Kiplinger, and was also toppled in a long but beautifully played strategic encounter against Suttles.

Biyiasas consequently lost heart and only scored 4-3, his worst result in a Northwest tournament in some time.

Former B.C. champion Bob Zuk of Surrey also wasn't in his usual form, posting only a so-so 5-2 result, which placed him well back.

It just could be that the recession is over, on the chess front, that is.

The two Games of the Week are Kiplinger's win over Biyiasas and the neat victory by Suttles over the B.C. champion.

Anglers try luck in Amsterdam

Outdoors with Alec Merriman

A Tall Fishy Story Earns Trip to B.C.

The biggest fish storyteller in all of Holland will visit British Columbia in August and will participate in the King Fisherman Contest.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Bax will be guests of CP Air and the B.C. Salmon Derby and will be in B.C. in mid-August especially to take part in the mammoth salmon derby in Vancouver's Howe Sound.

But Mr. Bax, who operates a 17th century farm at Zevenbergse Hoek, near Breda, is an enthusiastic fisherman and plans to also tour Vancouver Island fishing waters.

He told the tallest fish story out of 1,700 stories that were submitted as entries in a contest sponsored in Holland by CP Air and the Telegraaf newspaper in Amsterdam.

They will be accompanied on their British Columbia trip by Telegraaf fishing editor Piet Hendriks who was recently in Vancouver testing the early season salmon fishing there.

We didn't meet him this month when we were in Holland lining up the Amsterdam trip for our Colonist King Fisherman Contest winners this year, because he was in Ireland testing the fishing there.

But if the King Fisherman winners want to do a little fishing in Holland he will be the man to arrange it.

CP Air also sponsors the Amsterdam trip for two in the King fisherman Contest and thus is associated with fishing at both ends of the luxurious jet trip.

If the King Fisherman hidden weight prizewinner picks the end of May for his Amsterdam trip he could face plenty of fishing competition along Amsterdam's Amstel River.

We drove along the Amstel River two days before the Whitsun fishing season opening, with our Crown Tours guide Jantine in the vicinity of Amsterdam's new forest park, during a grand tour of Holland.

We noted scores of tents along the riverbank and the rods jutting out over the water, even though the fishing season hadn't yet started.

She told us a cute story.

Anglers gather along the banks of the Amstel a full week before the fishing season opens. Space is at a premium and the anglers gather to reserve their favorite fishing spot. Officials allow campers to set up tents in the park at that time.

One rod can reserve a spot for four feet on each side of it. Whole families, including grandmothers, will take turns watching that favorite rod spot for a week before the line can be dipped.

Then just after midnight on opening day, a trumpet is blown and fishing starts . . . much the same as in the splendid old days when a blast of fireworks used to signal the start of the Brentwood derbies, with a responding wash of boats rushing to the fishing grounds.

In Holland the lines are cast out and it isn't long before the action starts. No doubt the anglers have been groundbaiting the area for days before (it is legal in Europe) and the fish are ready to strike.

Out comes a tape measure and a pocket scale. The fish is measured, weighed, duly recorded . . . then actually kissed and returned to the water.

It is tradition.

Anglers are only allowed to keep one fish on opening night and they hope their second fish will be bigger.

We didn't fish on our Holland trip. Wife Taffy and I were too busy sightseeing, shopping in Amsterdam's fabulous stores, visiting its outstanding museums, cruising along its innumerable canals, and taking in its wide open nightlife.

These will all be up-coming stories in the Islander magazine and on these news pages. They will tell about things the lucky King Fisherman winners will be able to do next spring on their five-day visit to surprising Amsterdam with CP Air.

We will also be able to tell about camping in Europe and of our visit back to the battlefields of Normandy, and about our test run in Britain's Bedouin motorhome.

Errors Can Mean Money

By FAITH ANGUS

It is not generally known that British Columbia claims the honor of having discovered one of Canada's 20th century rarities, the 1969 Christmas error which caused the whole issue to disappear for a time at the height of seasonal mailing.

Postal authorities, unlike stamp collectors, experience no joy in the advent of defective adhesives so when nine copies were returned to a Vancouver post office because all the black print was missing, they quietly stopped the sale of all 6c Christmas stamps in Canada.

A careful check revealed 209 copies of the error. Another 191 copies had been purchased, most of which were used without being detected.

Two or three mint copies have been offered for sale recently at prices ranging from $2,500 to $2,750. All known copies of the error were found in Vancouver.

The number of new issues for June was augmented considerably last week by single stamps and sets commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Antarctic Treaty.

Participating countries in the peaceful scientific investigation of the Antarctic are Australia, Argentina, Belgium, Chile, France, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, South Africa, United Kingdom, U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.

In mid-June, Ethopia issued an ancient paintings set consisting of five stamps designed by M. Treska; five-color photo engraving by Courvoisier: 5c, The Fountain of Life; 10c, Portrait of King David playing the kerar; 25c, St. George and the Dragon; 50c, King Kaleb, a triptych on wood in the Church of Golgotha Mikael at Lalibela; 60c, murals in the Cathedral at Axum showing Yared, inventor of church music, dancing before King Kaleb.

On June 30, British Indian ocean territory commemorates the opening of the Royal Society Research Station with a Rs3.50 stamp showing a flightless rail and the seal of Aldabra: designed by V. Whiteley; lithography by Waddington's; CA Block watermark.

Seychelles marked the completion of the airport with a set of six on June 28.

On July 1, the United States postal service will issue simultaneously at all post offices a special 8c stamp featuring the new postal service emblem. The first in a series of stamps commemorating the bicentennial of the American Revolution will be issued at Washington, D.C., on July 4.

The design of the 8c stamp in vertical format is a reproduction of the official symbol of the bicentennial commission, a five-pointed white star outlined in red, white and blue rounded contour, a striking example of modern graphic design but with no apparent identification with the 200th anniversary of American independence.

Mining Company To Stand Trial

Court was told that between July 13, 1969 and Oct. 15, 1969, the company made false and misleading statements and failed to file an amendment within 10 days declaring changes that made previous statements inaccurate.

Provincial Judge John Coughlan set June 29 as the date for sentence and Aug. 5 for the trial of Lawrence Wickens of Edmonton, an officer in the company.

Annettes Find Favorite Tasks

Patients Are Always 'Best Part'

By BARBARA McLINTOCK

Ask any of the Annettes what they like best about their volunteer work at St. Joseph's Hospital and you always get the same answer — the patients.

"You meet so many different people," says Barenda Bergink, 16, of 1334 Burleith Crescent.

"The best part is going around the ward and meeting all the new patients each time you come in," added Darlene Barron, 17, of 609 Toronto.

"The patients, especially some of the older ones, really look forward to our coming and really make us feel welcome," notes Annette president Jane Cupples, 17, of 2833 Dufferin, Oak Bay.

Jane heads a corps of 143 girls who serve each week as volunteer nurses' aides at the hospital, running errands, entertaining patients and doing a hundred things the nurses are too busy to do.

The Annettes, named after the Sisters of St. Ann, were originally formed to attract high school girls into St. Joseph's School of Nursing when enrolment was falling in the school, Jane explained in an interview.

Now, however, enrolment has picked up again at the school, and the girls continue in the volunteer program "for its own sake."

Girls can join the program at age 14 and can continue in it as long as they wish, but most drop out at age 17 or 18 as the pressure of schoolwork and other activities increases.

They work on the wards from 4:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. with 10 to 15 girls working each day.

Originally, Jane said, the girls were supposed to work only one day each week so their schoolwork would not suffer, "but Theresa (vice-president Theresa O'Neill) blew all that."

Theresa began coming to the hospital three and four times a week, putting in 457 hours of service in her first year and a half in the Annettes. Now others have followed her lead and come as often as they wish.

The duties the girls perform are varied, but mainly have to do with improving the patients' comfort. They wash their hands and faces, help feed them at mealtimes, run errands, buy what they wish at the hospital newsstand and just talk to them.

They work in all the adult wards of St. Joseph's and also in Mount St. Mary extended-care hospital.

They move from ward to ward, but all have favorite wards. Barenda prefers working with the elderly patients, especially those in Mount St. Mary. "They're always worrying about your welfare and they always have lots of interesting stories to tell."

Theresa said her favorite ward was the psychiatric ward. "It's been very interesting to see what psychiatric patients are like and how you can help them."

Her experience in the hospital, and particularly on the psychiatric ward, has confirmed her desire to become a psychiatric nurse when she finishes school, she said.

But for Jante and Barenda the Annette work has made them change their minds about becoming nurses. "Nurses work a lot harder than is generally realized," Barenda said. "I just don't think I could do it.

"I'd like to work somewhere else in the hospital, though — maybe as a lab technician or something like that."

The Annettes receive a series of 11 training lectures before they are allowed to go onto the floor. After the lectures they write a test, and those who pass begin work with an older and more experienced Annette — a big sister.

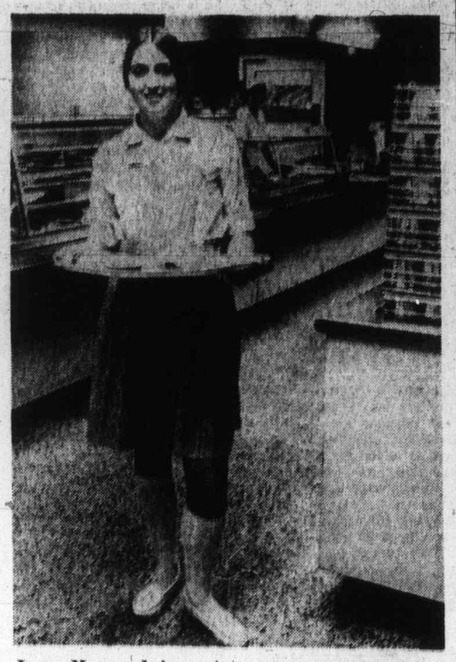

At present there are about 80 girls on the list waiting to join the program.

As well as their service in the hospital, the girls work on other service projects, particularly at Christmas time. Last year they sponsored a penny drive and a bake sale to raise enough money for food for two hampers.

Their supervisor, Mrs. Marjorie Fitzgerald, had nothing but praise for the girls, their parents and the hospital staff, all of whom co-operate to make the program a success, she said.

Having the group makes a great difference to the hospital she said, and is also good for the girls themselves because it keeps them "off the streets and interested in something really worthwhile."

"As president, I sometimes have to spend my day helping Mrs. Fitzgerald and planning and organizing things," Jane said. "But I'd much rather be out on the wards, helping the patients. I guess you feel sort of happy then that maybe you've cheered up somebody's day."

WEIGHT WATCHERS
ACTUALLY SAVE MONEY WHILE YOU LOSE WEIGHT
IF YOU ACT NOW YOU CAN!
Since 1963, while the price of everything else has gone up and up, Weight Watchers has managed to keep the cost of losing weight down. We had a simple idea: we wanted everyone who wanted to lose weight and keep it off to be able to come to Weight Watchers. So we charged a weekly fee of $2.00.
We've held the line as long as we can.
Beginning July 4, 1971, the weekly fee for Weight Watchers classes will be one dollar more. Our enrollment fee will remain $7. (Includes registration and first class fee.)
But if you join us before July 4, you'll be eligible for our 1970 rates for as long as you wish to stay on the program. Even with this modest cost increase, we think you'll agree that Weight Watchers is the outstanding value in weight control.
Through the years, Weight Watchers has grown. Over 2 million men, women and teenagers have been through the Weight Watchers program. We've added many new features designed to make Weight Watchers a place for all your weight control needs—a true weight control organization. There are many classes for men, women and teenagers—conveniently located throughout this area.
Weight Watchers has always been, and always will be a place of dignity and understanding. Every lecturer has actually been on the program and knows what it means to lose weight.
We are adding the Weight Watchers' Maintenance Plan (effective Sept. 6, 1971) — to help people to stay at their goal weight. There is no other organization quite like Weight Watchers. We sincerely believe there isn't a better value anywhere in weight control.
Join us today. You'll be glad you did.

New Unicorn's an exciting place! . . .

Honestly, we thought we'd go crazy the first time we stepped in to the Unicorn's new shop on View Street! . . . First of all, our eyes lit upon shelf after shelf of exciting small items . . . the sort of things you'd never think of yourself . . . but once found . . . you just know you have to have, either for youself or for gifts! . . . Like the "seed envelopes" containing bath granules made from pure fruit or vegetable extracts . . . They cost but pin money . . . and you'll find nothing else like them in these parts! . . . And then the clothes . . . Enough to turn anyone's head . . . and not just the kids, either! . . . We love the authentic Nanook Eskimo prints . . . Cotton knit hot pants, and long gowns with very good, very simple, slinky lines . . . The print design is that of birds . . . orange on a navy ground . . . yellow with pink . . These Nanook prints are very new and are exclusive to the Unicorn . . . as is practically everything else they sell . . . and the woman who'd like something decidedly different . . . yet in perfect taste and "now" fashion . . . need search no further than the Unicorn . . . And just wait till you see their new store, on View across from Eaton's . . . it's simply beautiful! . . . A real boutique, with hot pink and white decor . . . reminding us a bit of a tropical garden with its bright merchandise and real palm tree! . . . The Unicorn, 658 View St., 385-5114.

Travel bonanza for the young! . . .

Hottest travel news of the year is introduction of the new Youth Fares by all major air lines . . . and to which Air Canada and CP Air have just announced their own structures . . . We won't attempt to give you all the details . . . but Paulin's will be happy to do so . . . suffice to say that these new low round-trip fares between Canada and Europe apply to young people between the ages of roughly 12 and 26 . . . who can stay abroad up to a year . . . make unlimited confirmed reservations . . . travel on regular scheduled flights . . . but at fares 'way below normal . . . For instance, if you qualify, age-wise, you can fly from Vancouver to Glasgow or London and back for as little as $308 . . . perhaps sitting right next to an older person whose fare has cost around $700! . . . Isn't that great? . . . No need to join some organization, and go through a waiting period . . . or wonder whether charter flights will take off . . . or take your chances on student standbys . . . You book on regular flights . . . or rather you have Paulin's book you . . . because their office is all ready to go to town on getting you bookings right now . . . or for months ahead . . . They'll do other things too, like getting your passports, visas, and anything else you need . . . So see Paulin's first . . . then see the world . . . on a shoestring! . . . Paulin Travel, 1006 Government St., 382-9168.

Pick yourself a plum at Charmante's . . .

We don't visit Hillside Shopping Centre nearly often enough, we decided this week when we stopped in at Charmante's . . . and found their semi-annual clearance sale going full steam ahead! . . . To think we might have missed this . . . and the very sweater we'd been looking all over town for! . . . Well, we hope you won't miss visiting Charmante's soon . . . because their sale is still on . . . and judging by what we saw, there are some mighty juicy plums there for the picking! . . . Would you believe, striped Bleyle jackets marked down to $21? . . . or a coat and dress ensemble with a famous label whose price tag has been cut right down the middle . . . from $160 to $80! . . . Of course we can't guarantee that some of the things we saw will still be around . . . but we can assure you there are some very good buys . . . in all types of merchandise . . . Some very nice coats, dresses, pantsuits, etc. . . . reduced by as much as one half . . . Plenty of regular stock, too . . . a good selection of swimsuits sized from 8 to 18 . . . a nice assortment of blouses . . . some smart dresses . . . Moygashel linens and McMullen cottons . . . And if you've been bewailing the almost general shortage of such dresses . . . take our advice and visit Charmante's . . . It's a store you'll enjoy shopping in . . . because it caters to women of taste and discrimination . . . Charmante's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 385-1543.

Givenchy likes double breasted blazers for town wear over skirts, shorts, slacks and slits.

Ask the gal who's had one! . . .

What was that one-time famous car advertising slogan . . . Ask the man who owns one? . . . Well, we'd like to paraphrase it on behalf of Eaton's wedding reception catering . . . Just ask any bride who has entrusted this all-important reception to Eaton's . . . or for that matter, any guest who has attended an Eaton-catered function . . . and we'll stake our all on the answer they give you . . . "Lovely" . . . "delicious" . . . "sheer perfection," or other well-chosen words to this effect . . . Getting married this year? . . . Planning the reception in your own home or garden, or in a hall or club? . . . Then go have a talk with Mrs. Robertson in Eaton's Bridal Registry . . . She'll take the whole business in hand . . . Give you an interesting choice of menus . . . anything from afternoon tea refreshments to a full scale buffet or dinner . . . What's more, she'll act as hostess, provide servers, set up the bride's table with lace cloth, silver, bud vases and tapers . . . provide silver serving trays, dishes and crystal . . . And take our word for it, everything will be done to perfection . . . You'll be able to enjoy the wedding reception without a care in the world . . . knowing it's all in the highly trained and competent hands of the Eaton people . . . Eaton's Bridal & Gift Registry, 382-7141, local 373.

Costumes of great elegance and versatility . . .

One is always sure of being well-dressed . . . on virtually any occasion . . . in a becoming, perfectly-cut dress and jacket ensemble . . . And if, by chance, you yearn for such a treasure . . . we urge you to go to see some elegant new arrivals at Wilson's . . . These costumes are made exclusively for Wilson's . . . so you won't find their like elsewhere . . . They're silk, with something else mixed in to give them good body, and make them crush resistant . . . Dress has short sleeves, and jacket buttons to the neck with self-covered buttons . . . We saw a size 14 in a lighter-than-navy blue . . . A size 16 in brown . . . A couple of smaller sizes in light blue will probably be in when this column appears . . . But the nice thing is, that Wilson's can order this costume for you in any one of a gamut of lovely colors . . . they have swatches for you to choose from . . . We ourselves thought how delightful such an outfit in the soft, off-white shade would be for a bride's going-away costume . . . or what a perfect choice for a bride of more mature years to be married in! . . . However, don't get the idea these jacket dresses are overly dressy . . . They're simple, beautifully cut . . . and lend themselves well to accessorizing, so you can set the mood yourself . . . Priced at a reasonable $150 flat . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Reefers, wrap-around and trenchcoats with sash belts will be the leading coat styles this fall.

New H of G salon a real beauty oasis . . .

For reasons which we'll tell you about in a minute, we had our hair done at the downtown House of Glamour this week . . . instead of at the Junction . . . First time we'd patronized their new salon in the Bank of Commerce Building . . . and we soon realized why all H of G customers are so delighted with the new premises . . . Same skilful, friendly staff . . . performing their ministrations on you in surroundings calculated to soothe your body and delight your eyes . . . City parkade right next door so you can park your car easily and nip down to the lower Commerce Mall in seconds . . . keeping dry no matter what the weather . . . We hear that H of G has acquired a lot of new customers since their move . . . Why don't you make an appointment soon? We know you'll be delighted . . . And now for some news: The Junction Centre House of Glamour has passed into other hands as of last week, and will soon be given a new name . . . Danny Hajnal has asked us to thank this shop's many customers for their support and patronage during the past two years . . . and to wish new owner, Malcolm Ashford, the best of success in his new venture . . . House of Glamour, 1175 Douglas St., 386-6188.

Large Family Tradition To Be Revised

By BARRY JAMES

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Vatican officials say a papal booklet advising newlyweds to produce large families for "the fatherland" is being revised.

Pope Paul VI gives about 10,000 copies a year of the booklet along with rosaries and medals to Italian couples who attend his weekly general audience. The booklet says a large population is a nation's "greatest treasure" and prevents it from having to seek "humiliating alliances" to defend its frontiers.

The custom of giving a booklet of advice on Roman Catholic family living dates from the 1930s, when the dictatorship of Benito Mussolini was in full swing. Prelates said no proper revision of the 125-page booklet, entitled The Christian Family, has been undertaken since then.

In tones reminiscent of Mussolini's slogan, "numbers are power," the booklet says: "Fecundity is a gift to the nation. A numerous people is the greatest treasure. And if the country is in danger, it does not need to go begging humiliating alliances with other people to defend its frontiers."

The officials said the booklet is being revised to include Vatican ecumenical council teachings and recent documents of Pope Paul which hold that conjugal love is at least as important, if not more so, than the bearing and rearing of children. In the old theology, the transmission of life was considered the prime function of marriage to which everything else was subordinated.

The papal booklet says a large family is a gift to the nation because it encourages emigration, which ensures that "the name of the fatherland is carried to other countries and with the name, that heritage of glory which has accumulated over the centuries.

"It is a gift because it stimulates native ingenuity and makes people multiply their energies against spurring need in order that the land gives nourishment to its inhabitants," the booklet adds.

The booklet says that a large family is a gift to the parents, because it drives out loneliness, and to the church which it provides with priests and missionaries.

In stern words, the booklet warns against use of artificial methods of birth control or abortion.

"Confound those who place themselves against divine will in this matter," it says. "The curse of God will descend on those families where matrimony is profaned by abominable usages and the breaking of its foundations. Even if they escape punishment on earth, they will not do so in eternity."

The pope has endorsed limitation of births in two encyclicals, Populorum Progression and Humanae Vitae. In the latter, however, he banned artificial means of contraception, allowing only the so-called "rhythm period" based on a woman's natural periods of infertility.

Cancer Link Eyed

LONDON (AP) — Coffee drinking may cause cancer of the bladder, a group of American scientists said in an article in the British medical magazine, The Lancet.

Women appear twice as prone as men to cancer infection through coffee drinking, the group added.

Diamond Day Celebrated

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I was jilted twice in four years and I turned to my boss for comfort. He was married but no longer in love with his wife. We saw each other secretly for seven years.

Now it appears his wife has known about us all along—even the gifts he gave me — yet she said nothing. Last week she offered him a divorce. He didn't want one. Instead he has called off our romance. The following questions are keeping me up nights. Please supply some answers:

- Why would a wife sit by and let her husband carry on an affair for seven years?
- Why did he tell me he loved me and that he didn't love his wife, yet when he was faced with the choice he chose her?
- Do you think if I went to his wife and told her everything he said about her that she might change her mind and kick him out?
- What should I say to the rat for taking seven of the best years of my life?—Steady Reader Who Is Dying Inside

Dear Dy: If you are a steady reader you have seen your letter in this column a 100 times. Only the signatures are different.

The answers to your questions are as follows:

- She had nothing to gain by throwing him out and everything to gain by riding out the storm.
- This is the classic pattern for cheating husbands — you could have predicted it.
- Don't bore her with the details. She's not interested. If she was going to kick him out she would have done so by now.
- Don't bore him with a farewell speech. He's not interested either.

Dear Ann Landers: Will you please rescue at least a million mid-westerners who are hopelessly trapped by a larcenous gimmick called "bridal showers?"

The moment an engagement is announced the mothers start booking these ghastly parties. Some women find themselves on three or four lists. A turndown does not nullify the obligation to buy a gift. If you are unable to attend the shower, you are expected to send a gift anyway. These days it is impossible to buy anything decent for less than $10. And please be aware that a shower gift has nothing whatever to do with the wedding gift. That's separate.

The record for grabby mothers was set by a woman in our group who is considered well bred by all standards. She boasted that her daughter's shower loot amounted to well over $2,000 in usable goods. The wedding gifts, she estimated, will come to at least three times that amount. Help!—Party Pooped And Broke.

Dear P.P. and B.: What makes you think bridal showers are regional? It's a coast-to-coast affliction.

Only one shower should be given — preferably a jointly sponsored luncheon by all the bridesmaids. It should be a kitchen shower or a bathroom shower — with a limit on what can be spent for a gift. Tops — $3.

Prenuptial parties are usually a bore, and a waste of time, money and energy. The wise bride avoids them.

Now Erma is taking a well-deserved two-week vacation, and we are taking the opportunity this week and next to accede to her fans' wishes by publishing those all-time favorite Bombeck columns most often requested.

Someday soon you'll probably pick up your paper and read where I am being charged with child neglect. I can see it coming and I am helpless to do anything about it. The only thing I can do is to tell you my side of the story and hope for mercy.

A short while ago, I was told by a close friend, "If you don't start letting go of your children, you're going to be one of those mothers who stows away on a honeymoon to swab out your son's ears with cotton tips."

In my heart, I knew she was right. So I began by letting the children dress themselves. It was a shock when I first saw them. They looked as if they were dressed for a hobo party. One had discovered a skirt in her mattress and decided to wear it. The jeans had ventilation at both knees and in every seam. And the shirts had no buttons and were being held together with prayers.

"Where did you get those clothes?" I gasped. "Out of the Good Will bag in the garage?"

"In our closets," they said defensively.

"Does it bother you at all that a family in Southeast Asia may adopt us?" (silence) "Or that a couple from the Peace Corps might be assigned to live with us until we can get back on our feet?"

"Are you kidding us?" said one, tugging at his rope belt. "Would I kid? I don't know where you dug up those pyjamas the other night when Grandma was here. All I know is she slipped me a cheque and, with tear in her eyes, said, 'God bless you, my child.' If you kids want independence, you're going to have to shape up and earn it."

I told my friend about their "costumes" and she just smiled. "Now you're getting the hang of it. It's time to go one step farther and let them fend for themselves for one evening. No baby-sitter. They're getting too old for that. They'll rise to the occasion. You'll see."

We left them for four hours. When we returned the house appeared to lean a bit. One child was sobbing behind her bedroom door. The other one had the television up so loud we had to read lips. The back door was open. There was a shoe in the yard. The house looked like the path of a tornado. There was a stale peanut butter sandwich on the fireplace. A telephone number with only three digits on the message pad. We heard two versions of what happened. When we find the third child, we'll have heard three.

I'm probably being optimistic, but I predict that in less than six weeks they'll all be wards of the court.

Dominion Day Celebrations Highlight Official Activities

Dominion Day celebrations in Victoria and on Saturna Island will highlight the activities of Lieutenant-Governor John Nicholson next week.

Thursday morning Nicholson will read a special proclamation on the steps of the legislative buildings in the presence of Prime Minister Trudeau, Premier Bennett and the federal and provincial cabinets.

In the afternoon the lieutenant-governor will attend the Saturna Island lamb barbecue, and in the evening he will open the Festival of Youth sponsored by the Greater Victoria Boy Scouts in Beacon Hill Park.

Monday he will attend the Victoria performance of the All Native Children's Tattoo in the Memorial Arena.

IODE Recalls 60 Years

Dorothy Wrotnowski

Flora Hamilton Burns was very much in the spotlight on Tuesday evening when the Robert Burns McMicking Chapter IODE celebrated its 60th anniversary at Uplands Golf Club.

She was the first regent of the Daisy Chain Chapter, later the Marguerites and still later the Major John Hebden Gillespie Chapter.

The Daisy Chain Chapter came into being on April 29, 1911, and members were all under 10 years of age.

Miss Burns told the gathering that "This is the most marvelous occasion, I can assure you, I never thought in 1911 that this would be the progeny of that little group." She also said, "I am absolutely fascinated with the reports showing what has been accomplished through the years."

She recalled with amusement the tolerant attitude of early days. During the First World War she had passed her McGill examinations and was attending the first normal school in Victoria. Soon after she started the course, she received a phone call from Dr. Robertson, telling her that he "had a nice place for her to go."

The young budding teacher explained that she wouldn't be finished with her course until spring (this was in October.)

"Oh, that doesn't matter, you can come back anytime," he replied.

"The nice place" turned out to be Salt Spring Island. Miss Burns became the teacher at Central settlement for 18 months. The post had been vacated suddenly because the young teacher's fiance in England had been posted overseas, and she had to get back to see him.

It was during Flora Burns' sojurn on Salt Spring that an IODE chapter was formed there.

From the scrap book kept by Mrs. R. S. Day, organizing secretary in 1911, she quoted from a letter written by Mrs. Day to Mrs. Gooderham, national president.

"Dear Mrs. Gooderham:

On April 29, Mrs. (Henry) Croft and I, the former presiding, and in the presence of the mothers assembled, formally organized the Daisy Chain Chapter of the Children of the Empire, consisting of 18 little girls under the age of 10 years, to whom at Mrs. Croft's request, I explained in very simple language the meaning and objects of the order. I showered the 'make-up' of the Union Jack, its meaning, and had a large map of the world, showing the British Empire, etc.; then with the consent of their mothers these dear little children, in their baby handwriting signed the application for the charter. Two names were added later of children, with an historic pedigree, who, in turn through illness had been unable to attend the meeting."

These 'dear little children' with the baby handwriting were: Aldersay Hallam, Mabel Rhodes, Marjorie Currie, Biddy Floyd, Jocelyn Innes, Beatrice Wolfenden, Esther Alexander, Vivien Combe, Helen Macdonald, Helen Laundy, Vivian Matson, Helen Bennett, Kate Kelman Renwich, Aileen Innes, Isabel Munn, Madge McGregor, Mary Rattenbury, Frances Bennett, Nancy J. and Constance A. M. Ross.

Although several of these original members still live in Victoria, only one was at the anniversary dinner party, Mrs. R. S. M. Forbes (Helen Laundy).

Mrs. Spilsbury, still quoting from Mrs. Day's scrapbook: "These were the children who occupied the 'Cradle of Empire' float (referred to by Miss Burns earlier) which by many was thought to be the most beautiful of all.

"It was entirely carried out in white and gold, decorated with daisies, the Empire flower and festooned with daisy chains, drawn by four pure white horses, with trappings of white, studded with daisies.

"The four men who walked at the horses' heads were in white liveries, and the outrider was one of our beautiful girls, on a white horse, bearing a white standard with 'Children of the Empire' on it in gold.

"The officers of the chapter were with the children (one at each corner) and all their dresses were pure white, festooned with daisy chains and wreaths of daisies on their heads. The effect baffles description and was really charming in its simplicity and dazzling in its beauty."

In the 20s the members began to hear "ominous voices concerning the proper channels" for the chapter's proceeding. When the group gave $100 to the Salvation Army at Christmas to spend on poor families, real consternation reached the municipal ranks.

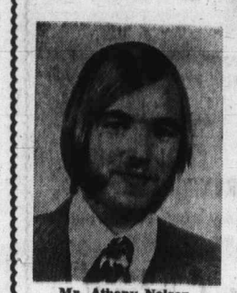

At the next meeting the late Mrs. Hebden Gillespie came to give the chapter an interesting talk on the Constitution and Statues of the Chapter and the late Mrs. S. P. Moody became their regent to "guide them through the proper channels."

Mrs. Moody's daughter, Jean, Mrs. E. M. Greenwood came from Vancouver to attend the anniversary. Jean Greenwood was a charter member of the Major John Hebden Gillespie Chapter. Other charter members of this primary chapter at the dinner were Mrs. J. B. Speck, Mrs. R. H. Spilsbury and Miss Wilma Henderson.

Miss Joan E. O. French, regent, had with her at the head table Mrs. Arthur J. T. Laundy, Municipal Chapter regent; Mrs. Carlton Collard, zone regent; Mrs. V. H. V. Shepherd, Provincial vice-regent; Miss Burns and Miss Elizabeth Forbes, honorary and vice-regent, and Mayor Fran Elford of Oak Bay. All head table guests spoke briefly of their association with the IODE following the regent's adrress.

Pie Throwing Suit Launched

KALISPELL, Mont. (UPI) — A pie-throwing incident has wound up in a $125,000 damage suit.

Mrs. Mary Newbury asserts in a suit filed here that she was struck in the head last year by a rhubarb pie allegedly thrown by Mrs. Bernice Dunham of Columbia Falls, Mont., her employer.

Mrs. Newbury claims she was injured when the glass pie plate broke on the back of

Today's Youth Knows More

STOWE, England (CP) — Address from headmaster Robert Drayson to parents at a Buckinghamshire school fete: "Do not expect your children to be the same as you were 25 years ago. They are hairier, untidier, less polite, less patient with authority and know a lot more about sex. They are also less prejudiced, more independent and better informed."

"I will buy her a new dress . . . I will buy her a new dress . . ."

Pregnant Brides Tallied

LONDON (Reuter) — One bride of every five in Britain is pregnant on her wedding day.

And, says a report by the British Family Planning Association, the figure is even higher for teenage brides, with one in three in England and Wales expecting a baby and one in four in Scotland.

Over-all, more than 100,000 unmarried women and girls became pregnant last year in Britain, the association reported.

The report also disclosed a steep rise in teenage abortions in Britain. In the first quarter of this year, 4,555 had abortions, a 28-per-cent increase on the figures for the same period of 1970.

The report highlighted an alarming increase in venereal disease among British teenagers, with a 20-per-cent increase between 1968 and 1969.

Too Much Distraction

TAIPEI (AP) — Call girls at Formosa's hot springs resort Peitou will be forbidden to ride motorcycles to their appointments because police said "girls in eye-catching scanty clothes of gorgeous colors are too much of a distraction to motorists."

Clubs, Societies

Tickets for the annual Silver Threads picnic, day trips to Hurricane Ridge and Harrison Hot Springs and a seven-day trip to Johnston Canyon are available at the main Silver Threads Centre, 4 Centennial Square.

The day trip to Hurricane Ridge and Port Angeles will be July 22 and the one to Harrison Hot Springs July 29. The Johnston Canyon trip will leave Aug. 29.

Four Bodies Recovered

LORAIN, Ohio (UPI) — The bodies of four workmen were brought out of the charred hold of U.S. Steel Corp's new ore carrier Roger Blough Saturday night, three days after an explosion and fire tore through the vessel as it sat in drydock.

The dead men, identified as Leonard C. Moore, 34; John D. Alexander, 29; Clyde R. Burdue, 60; and George E. Adams, 44 were trapped in the huge carrier when the fire started Thursday. About 100 other men fled to safety.

Still More To Come

State fairground in Salem, Ore., was packed Saturday with about 2,500 trailers gathered for 14th annual rally of Wally Byam International Caravan. Total is expected to swell to 3,000 by the time week-long event officially opens Monday.—(AP)

Japanese Cast Votes

TOKYO (UPI) — Millions of Japanese voters, cast ballots Sunday to elect members of the powerless but influential Upper House of Parliament.

Entertainers and other well known personalities were among the candidates permitted to spend from $10,300 to $23,333.

Prime Minister Eisaku Sato, 70, in office since 1964, is not expected to run for re-election next year.

Vancouver Skid Road

Drug, Alcohol Deaths Rise Without Arrests

VANCOUVER (CP) — A change in police handling of drunks in 1968 has resulted in an increase in skid road deaths from alcohol and drugs to 113 in 1970 from 41 in 1967, the Alcoholism Foundation says in a report to city council.

The board of administration report, to be presented to council Tuesday, says there is a need for massive accommodation on a voluntary and involuntary basis to handle drunks who are no longer dealt with in the courts.

Dr. Gerald Bonham, city medical health officer, says the foundation is "fully justified" in its view.

The courts stopped prosecuting drunks in February, 1968, except in cases where they create a disturbance or violate other laws. As a result, drunks are picked up and jailed overnight before being turned loose.

Liquor Laws Yukon's Pride

WHITEHORSE, Yukon (CP) — When it comes to booze, just about anything goes in the Yukon.

That includes drinking on the main street, in a car or being able to buy beer from a licensed vendor 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Just about everyone in the territory seems proud of the Yukon's liberalized liquor laws. In the words of the territory's legal adviser, P. O. Donaghue, the Yukon merely took out every section of the old laws that created offences.

Thus to be drunk in a public place is not a crime. A Mountie might haul revellers off to jail on a cold night for fear they'll fall on their faces and freeze to death but they'll be released at 6 o'clock the next mroning with no charges laid.

As a safeguard, the laws say you can be charged on the advice of the commissioner with being drunk. In the first year, this consent was given once for a chronic offender.

Ken McKinnon, one of the council members who approved the new laws, said one of the compelling reasons for it was that there appeared to be some discrimination against Indians in how the old ones were enforced.

Donaghue also said there appeared to be concern in the territorial administration that while the Yukon made the law, it had no control over how it was interpreted or enforced.

Before the Supreme Court of Canada decided that liquor offences in the Indian Act were invalid and while the case was still before the high court, the Yukon was still jailing Indians under the Act.

In the N.W.T., it was decided not to lay such charges until the high court made its decision.

Unusual Hush Gone

By BERT BINNY

The unusual hush that descended over the stages and concert platforms of Victoria last week has been dispelled in no uncertain manner.

True, the Butchart Buskers have been in operation Saturdays and Sundays since May 15 and will continue so to be. But, starting Monday, they will also move to the stage for shows Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

With them on all four performances will be Betty Winter, Ginny Lefever, Marge Bridgeman and John Crago. John Dunbar appears Tuesdays with Murray McAlpine and Christopher Ross adding their talents the other three nights.

Thursday will be Scottish and Variety Night. Features will be the Pipes and Drums of the Canadian Scottish Regiment (Princess Mary's).

Of course, there will be Highland Dancers. Among these will be 1969 World Champion Angus McKenzie of Victoria. Angus is also current Champion of Champions in Canada and he will appear in the first four shows.

At the opening two performances, July 1 and 8, he will be joined by Geoffrey Kerr who was the 1970 Northwest American champion.

Emcee is baritone John Dunbar and the cast includes vocalist Janet Senior, accordionist Lawrence Tuttle, pianist Grace Timp and drummer Dave Ferne.

The Victoria Girls' Drill Corps will be on hand for the first and last shows, July 1 and Sept. 2.

Stage Whispers

Shows by the Zingari Puppets are on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings and the Grace Tuckey Puppets, with three puppeteers, perform at 3.30 and 4.30 on Sunday afternoons.

And there are also color film showings Saturday and Sunday evenings.

Registrations are now coming in from students across Canada and from the State of Oregon for the ninth consecutive Victoria Summer School of Music. Returning as directors are Professor Clayton Hare, violinist, and Dorothy Swetnam, pianist. The school will be held at St. Margaret's schol, Lucas Avenue. Classes are due to start July 5 and end Aug. 6.

Interested Victoria students may register by writing the Secretary, Victoria Summer school, Lucas Avenue. Classes or by calling 383-5248.

But, even in the face of all this glittering future promise, don't forget the Wonderful World of Magic at the McPherson Playhouse at 7 p.m. tonight, Monday and Tuesday.

This cavalcade of illusion, black magic and legerdemain has an all-star cast from the World Magicians' Conference in Vancouver.

SCOUT AUXILIARY

Pins went to Mrs. A. G. Markider, Mrs. H. C. Stead and Mrs. Evelyn Callaghan. Mrs. J. T. Shea and Mrs. Markider also were given gifts of appreciation.

Wage Settlement Ends Forest Firm Strike

MACKENZIE, B.C.—Twenty-eight employees of the Finlay Forest Industries plan have voted to end a three-week strike by accepting a new company wage offer.

Founded Gliding Club

City Realtor Dies at 72

A memorial service will be held 2 p.m. Monday at St. Mary's Anglican Church, 1701 Elgin, Oak Bay for John Hallin Ford, of 1318 Hampshire, Oak Bay, who died Wednesday at Royal Jubilee Hospital after a brief illness. He was 72.

Ford born in Honan, China was a Victoria realtor for the past 20 years. He was the eldest son of Rev. and Mrs. H. T. Ford of the China Inland Mission and was educated at the well-known Chefoon school.

He was instrumental in founding the Victoria Gliding Club and was an active glider pilot who trained instructors into his mid-60's.

Ford served in the British Army in the First World War and later served for the duration of the Second World War with the Canadian Forces, first in the Pacific Command and later with British Intelligence in the Far East.

Ford served four times as president of the United Nations Association in Victoria. He was also an active member of the World Federalist Association after coming to Victoria following a brief stint in New Zealand.

St. John Ambulance Medal

Gift Borne on Wings

A centennial gift for St. John Ambulance will be flown to Victoria from England by the Earl of Shelbourne in the B.C. Centennial air race from London, England, to Victoria which starts July 1.

The gift is a specially minted silver medal bearing the likeness of the Duke of Gloucester, Prior of the St. John Ambulance corps.

Edward Thomas, St. John provincial staff officer, told the Colonist Saturday the medal will be presented July 7 at Patricia Bay airoprt to corps member Marilyn Dwyer, 18, of 569 Baker, Saanich. Miss Dwyer will accept it on behalf of the provincial headquarters in Vancouver, its ultimate destination.

'NO ONE KNEW ABOUT PARKS'

McWilliams

He's Out Of the Woods

A section of land near Morton Lake in the Sayward district of northern Vancouver Island serves as a simple but clear general record of the career of Harold McWilliams, who retires next week as deputy minister of the provincial recreation and conservation department.

McWilliams first visited the area in the late 1920s. At that time, his purpose was to log it.

He returned about 20 years later with a different purpose in mind. As forester-in-charge of the provincial reforestation program, he was back to plant the second time.

New Park

His third, and most recent, official contact with Morton Lake came in the early 1960s, however. By that time, as director of the provincial parks branch, McWilliams was there to establish it as a new park.

Born in Manitoba in 1905, he was raised in Vancouver and earned a BA from the University of B.C. before attending the University of Washington where he earned a degree in forest engineering.

His contacts with the B.C. Forest Service began while he was still a student working summers with them. Following a brief period with a logging company, he joined the department permanently after graduation.

Four Weeks

As a member of survey parties, McWilliams was normally assigned the task of preceding detailed crews and taking a general inventory of an area.

There was only one way to do it 40 years ago and he recalls that it took him four weeks to complete a reconnaissance of the Willow River drainage by foot.

Another trip he certainly remembers involved the area north of Fort St. James and took two months to complete. The party consisted of himself, an assistant and three horses, but the horses were only to be used for carrying supplies.

It cost 50 cents a day to rent a horse at that time and the cost was too great for the forest service to allow McWilliams one to ride, he explains.

In 1937 his legwork was reduced somewhat when he was placed in charge of the provincial reforestation program. Within two years he had increased production from 50,000 to 1 million seedlings.

"That's a drop in the bucket now," he says, "but it was quite an advance then."

One thousand seedlings could be grown at that time for about $2.50, he said. The comparable price today ranges from $13 to $39.

'A Mess'

After 20 years in reforestation, McWilliams was appointed director of the parks branch, which was at that time part of the forest service.

What he found he describes quite simply as "a mess." Millions of acres had been designated as parks, he said, but they seemed more to have been created for political than any other reasons.

"There was no one to administer them, no one who seemed to really know anything about parks, and with a lot of the parks, no one seemed able to find any reason why they should ever have been made into parks in the first place," he said.

The public did not appear to be very interested in parks anyway, he said. In 1957 the number of visits to provincial parks per capita were only .2 as compared with the 1970 figure of 4.5

Protected

Making the situation even worse, he said, the parks were full of mining claims and other alienations. Ridding parks of these was given priority and today, he says, about half of the total parks acreage is completely protected and the work is continuing.

Acquisition of new parklands was not overlooked as work was done on existing parks, however, and the 116 parks McWilliams found in 1957 have increased to 285 by this year.

His proudest acquisition, he said, was the establishment of the Bowren Lakes Park and a close second is the small but heavily-used Shuswap Lake Park.

Vacation

In 1968 he was appointed deputy minister of the recreation and conservation department to which the parks branch had been transferred when it was established.

Although he had been scheduled to retire last year, McWilliams had continued for an additional year at the government's request. His retirement takes effect next Thursday, but he will be completing a vacation leave until that time.

A member of both the Barkerville and the Fort Steele restoration committees, he said he will likely remain with these for a bit longer.

A past-president of the B.C. Registered Foresters' Association, McWilliams has also been active in areas not related to his work.

Travel Plans

He was, for example, an appointee to the Greater Victoria Library Board for seven years, serving as chairman for three of them.

He was also twice president of the University Extension Association, with which he has been active for many years.

In his retirement he hopes to do a bit of travelling with his wife, Gloria. As for his past, McWilliams says he has only one regret.

He had been invited to try out for the Canadian track team for the 1928 Olympics. It would have meant a year out from school, however, so he declined and has regretted the decision since.

McWilliams managed, nonetheless, to set a record that stood for 12 years while running the half-mile as a member of the UBC track team.

Companions Hike to Safety

Sidney Canoeist Lost

TOFINO — A Sidney man remained missing Saturday night and two Victoria area men hiked overnight Thursday on a logging road to safety following a canoeing mishap Thursday night on Kennedy River, Tofino RCMP reported Saturday.

"Possibly lost if he hasn't drowned" is Frederick Angus Gunn, 31, of 271 Coad Point Lane, Sidney, RCMP spokesmen said.

The two other persons accompanying Gunn, RCMP said, were Tom Johnstone, of 4670 Spring, Victoria, and Peter Rassenti, of Prospect Lake Road, Saanich. Police said they were unhurt.

Ucluelet RCMP, who are assisting Tofino RCMP in the police search for Gunn, said the three men were canoeing down Kennedy River which flows from Kennedy Lake to Tofino Inlet.

"About two miles before (the river's mouth) are rapid waters.

"They tried going through the rough water and the canoe overturned.

"I don't know why they were trying it but they did anyway. The canoe just tipped over," Ucluelet RCMP spokesmen said. They said the river flows through rugged wilderness about 10 miles east of Tofino.

Tofino RCMP spokesmen said the three men "thought the rapids looked all right and shot the rapids."

"The canoe overturned and they (Johnstone and Rassenti) let go. The third man held on to the canoe and we haven't found him.

"One fellow got to Ucluelet abut 9:30 a.m. Friday after walking most of the way and the other fellow got in about 2 p.m.

"We have found a couple of pieces of the canoe," Tofino RCMP spokesman said. They said the rest of the canoe is still missing.

Ucluelet RCMP said some clothing and packsacks have also been found.

Police spokesmen said the three men were not wearing lifebelts but added the canoe was equipped with built-in flotation devices.

Church Picnic Set at Farm

The annual picnic of the Unitarian Church of Victoria will be held July 4, starting at noon, at Sea Bluff Farm, Metchosin, and not today as advertised in Saturday's Colonist. The picnic will follow the 10:30 a.m. service in the church at 106 Superior Street, Victoria.

Drunks Spoil Road Trend

COURTENAY — First five months of traffic statistics show a downward trend in offences, especially in reckless driving, according to the RCMP's highway patrol in this area. However, a spokesman said that drunk driving seems to be on the increase.

Full-Scale Recovery Operation

Ten Bodies Hauled Out of Tunnel

SYLMAR, Calif. (LAT) — Full-scale search and recovery operations began for the first time Saturday in a death-littered tunnel 250 feet below here where an explosion claimed 17 lives Thursday.

By noon, exploration crews had recovered three more bodies from the ravaged metropolitan water district tunnel and had sighted two more.

Their retrieval brings to 10 the number of victims brought to the surface thus far, more than 60 hours after an apparently huge pocket of methane gas ignited at the tunnel face.

B.C. Tories Pick Leader in Fall

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Progressive Conservative party will hold a leadership convention this fall, party leader John de Wolf said Friday.

The convention call was initiated by de Wolf and approved April 17, but kept secret until now because de Wolf wanted to be sure the party had adequate funds to hold a convention.

De Wolf, an economist elected to the leadership in June, 1969, said he has not decided whether to stand for re-election. He said he called for the leadership vote because a party must have periodic leadership reviews.

He said the Progressive Conservative party generally has had a "shabby record of leadership conflicts in the last 30 years" and that "this cannibalism of Tories has been because there has been no procedure for periodic reviews."

'Pop' Cops Arrest Youths

READING, England (UPI) — Police wearing jeans and long hair infiltrated a Reading rock festival Saturday and arrested 80 youths for illegal possession of marijuana.

More than 500 police dressed in hippie gear and supported by dogs and a helicopter mingled with the estimated 30,000 rock fans at the festival on the banks of the Thames, about 50 miles west of London.

Police sources said the operation was carefully planned in advance of the festival. Policemen had let their hair grow and concocted costumes of beads and patched shirts.

A special police laboratory for analyzing marijuana was set up near the grounds and temporary jail cells were set up in different town buildings. Police were trained to distinguish a marijuana cigarette from a normal cigarette by sight and smell.

What's Going On?

Symphony Costs Up By 480 Per Cent

By BILL THOMAS

The day of reckoning is at hand. It's Monday at 8 p.m. in Dunlop House, when the Victoria Symphony Society holds its annual general meeting.

First, it will be interesting to see how many people turn out to see what is going on. It will also be interesting to see if they are told what's going on.

There are some interesting questions to be answered, not glossed over, but answered honestly. Why in this past year have six directors resigned? The real reasons would be interesting. Not the usual ones like . . . I'm not feeling well or pressure of business. The real ones.

There must be some financial wizard who can tell us all why costs related to music and our artists have risen by about 30 per cent over the past five years while our administration costs have risen 480 per cent. I had better repeat that. Our administration costs have risen almost 500 per cent. You better ask and demand an answer.

Over the past five years all the grants from the public purse have gone up as have the general receipts but the donations collected by the board have fallen by 30 per cent.

If the board is claiming any success it might let us in on the secret of why the donations they have been able to pull in have fallen so far behind.

Possibly musical director Laszlo Gati can explain some of these things in his annual report. He should tell us. Perhaps the president and the treasurer can tell us, but we should be told.

We deserve to be told. Being told that being on the symphony board is a tough, time-consuming, thankless job is really quite dull. We all know it's hard work so why take it on if the individual is not prepared for it? Excuses are really rather boring.

Personally I make no apology for supporting Gati. I went to see him personally in Montreal after hearing about his abilities and I asked him to apply for the job here. I campaigned actively for him to get the job here and I was happy when he was chosen.

I challenge anyone to show me how a better job could have been done on the budget we have. I challenge anyone to show me a program of seasons when we have had better soloists and more variety. The orchestra has never sounded so good, the music at the cash register for the box office is good and the plans for the future are truly exciting at a time when the talk is all of recession. Let's get down to common sense and pull this mess together. We want good music, good soloists and a good orchestra.

It is the duty of the board of directors to see that we get all these things.

□

The film business is a good business to have in any locality. Films cost money so the crews spend plenty. The last epic shot here, Five Easy Pieces, was a commercial success not only at the box office but at the cash registers of local merchants.

There are hints of another major production coming here.

Deputy Minister of Travel, Ron Worley has put out a booklet in conjunction with B.C. film oriented companies, encouraging them to come here to shoot on location. There are also ads in the film industry papers Hollywood Reporter and Variety.

Victoria Fair opens its third season musically Wednesday when the festival chamber orchestra under the direction of George Corwin offers a concert of works by Bach, Haydn and Schubert. All concerts will start at 8 p.m. in the MacLaurin Auditorium.

The Concerto for Trumpet in E Flat was written in 1796 when Haydn was at the height of his capability. This is a demanding work that should demonstrate the ability of faculty member Boyd Hood who will be soloist.

The same program will be repeated Friday at the same time and place.

This is the third centenary of the birth of the great German artist Albrecht Durer and some examples of his art are on display at the McPherson Playhouse.

The basic problem is that they are on the mezzanine so that if you don't happen to buy a ticket for something you don't see Durer.

This strikes me as grossly unfair. The German government is paying for the show and as wide a public as possible should see it. It might have been better if the show had been displayed for free in the Provincial Museum.

The Week in Records

Creedence Clears the Way

By KING LEE

Creedence Clearwater Revival has "survived" a seven-month "vacation" and will have a new single out in the first week of July.

The group's last hit was Long As I Can See the Light and since that time Tom Fogerty has left the group, which now consists of Tom's brother John, Doug Clifford and Stu Cook.

The reasons given for the group's long layoff were chiefly the desire for a long vacation, their first break since Suzie Q put them on top in 1969, and the need to readjust to Tom's departure.

But the most important reason was a private one — the question whether Creedence would continue as a group. The point which caused the crisis was John Fogerty's control of the group.

School Band

To understand the problem, one has to go back to the beginning of the musical careers of Tom Fogerty, Clifford and Cook. The three formed a band called the Blue Velvets nearly 12 years ago when they were in junior high school.

It was some time later that John Fogerty joined in, sang lead and helped write some of the songs. More and more, the musical leadership fell on John's shoulders.

And it was under John's leadership that the group gained national and international prominence. It was John who brought the songs into the studio, played them and told the other three what their parts were.

The formula was successful and the domination was accepted because of the phenomenal success of Creedence Clearwater Revival.

John has admitted that there were many times that his decisions were three-against-one propositions but, due to the overwhelming track record shown by Fogerty, the other three relented.

Work Magic

The agreement reached during their period of soul-searching is that the others would be free to contribute songs to new albums, have a greater voice in the group's affairs and assist with arrangements as well as take over some of the business responsibilities.

"In the beginning, we all kept waiting for someone to come along and work their magic for us, tell us what moves to make," John said, explaining how the role of leader tell on him. "I remember hoping that each new record would be good enough that some fabled guy would come along and take us under his wing.

"But he never came. So we had to learn to depend on ourselves. Because I was making the decisions about the music, it was assumed I would make the other decisions, too. A lot of people called me power hungry because I produced the records. They said we should get someone else to produce them. Well, I wrote the songs and I knew how I wanted them to sound. That's the only reason I produced them."

With all the problems seemingly behind them now, Creedence will begin a two-month concert tour next month, return to the studio to record an album and then start another concert tour in mid-October.

$100 Million

With the group's sales now nearing $100 million in sales and the earning power for a stage concert up to $90,000 a night, the decisions that led to the "new" relationship was quite understandable.

John still remains the "captain" of the team. But the players get a share of the decision-making and business-dealings.

No replacement will be made for the departed Tom Fogerty, who left the group because he was tired of touring and wanted more time to spend with his family. Tom also wants to record a solo album.

'Super' Group

So the group touted by many to be the next "super" group to take over the Beatles almost followed them into oblivion. They saved themselves by coming to an understanding during a "vacation."

Hit LPs: It Ain't Easy by John Baldry could just catch on for the British blues singer. Best here are Black Girl, Morning, Morning, Let's Burn Down the Cornfield, Rock Me When He's Gone and a monolog, Don't Try to Lay No Boogie Woogie on the King of Rock and Roll.

She does a smooth job with the title tune, L.A. Breakdown, I Am Woman and Best Friend.

Rod Stewart hasn't been heard from for quite a while. His latest album, Every Picture Tells a Story, should bring him back into the limelight. That's All Right, Tomorrow Is Such a Long Time, Maggie May, Reason to Believe and title song are worthwhile.

Liquor Tax Hit

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington's new liquor tax will be challenged in court on the basis it was passed after midnight on the last day of the 1971 legislative session, a Seattle attorney says.

Gerald Collier said Friday he plans to challenge the two-cent an ounce liquor tax increase with a suit filed on behalf of the distilled spirits institute.

The suit could affect the entire tax package approved by the lesitlature, Collier said.

Other tax increases in the package are five-cents per pack for cigarettes, six-tenths of a cent on the natural gas excise tax, 15 per cent on tobacco other than cigarettes and 3 per cent on unpaid tax assessments.

Ontario Team Leading

WINNIPEG (CP) — A rally team from London, Ont., Haydn Gozzard and David Grundy, were leading in the British Columbia Centennial '71 car rally as competitors pulled in here Saturday for a 12-hour rest in their gruelling 4,800-mile endurance run from Ottawa to Victoria.

The London team, driving a Renault 8 Gordini, held on to the lead with 229 penalty points, 18 fewer than the second-place team of Paul MacLellan of King City, Ont., and Dave Phippen of Kingston, Ont., driving a Fiat 124 sport coupe.

Smile Show Raises Laughs

By BERT BINNY

With infinitely more to recommend it than to condemn it, the 19th annual Smile Show went on at the Oak Bay junior high school auditorium Saturday night before a large audience.

It is amply evident that every care has been taken in the preparation and setting up of the show.

Set changes were fast and just about all of the sketches and blackouts were just fine. The music, supplied by musical director and pianist Peter Williams and drummer Don Restall, was alert and lively.

There was lots to laugh at in the scripting, even the pleasantries borrowed from TV or resurrected from Gracie Fields — 1928 vintage.

But sleeping dogs should be let lie and references to the Langham Court Theatre would have been better omitted. Tourists could not be expected to understand them and few of Victoria's show buffs are, by now, still particularly interested.

Jerry Gosley's Violin Vignette was lovely. His If You Were the Only Boy or Girl with Dorothy Hosie was a riot. Their Emblems of Victoria seemed a bit protracted.

Mark Smith provided an outstanding performance. His Water Music by Handle, involving the Baritone Single-Octave Toilet Plunger, was sheer delight and he came back with another stellar showing in Swan Lake.

Bill Dyson is also a very attractive performer. He has a most pleasant voice but his singing never came over to the best advantage because there was too much other activity going on at the same time.

Dancers Cynd Connolly, Dawn-Alena Poulson, Terri Shingles and Linda Geddes were something better than added attractions.

But we would have liked to have seen more of Janie Woods. She has proved herself in these parts and, doubtless, elsewhere but she had very little to work on last night.

The Smile Show continues every week-night through Aug. 28 with curtain time at 8:15 p.m.

Big Turnout

VIENNA (Reuter) — A large turnout is expected today throughout Bulgaria when voters formally endorse the election of 400 deputies to legislature and thousands more local officials and judges.

The bulgarian general elections, scheduled last year, were postponed at the same time as the Communist Party congress, which was put off until April this year.

Schools' Day Care Urged

Day care centres should be operated by the public school system, not by the welfare department, says Greater Victoria school trustee Daphne temple.

"Since they can't possibly keep children in these centres all day without teaching them something, we should see that what is taught will fit in with what the child will meet up with in grade I," said Mrs. Temple Saturday, in an interview.

Such a course, she felt, would also help to implement hoped-for changes in the requirements for children entering Grade I instead of the present age criteria.

Island trustees have already endorsed her attempt to get such a change, which will be considered by B.C. School Trustees Association at the fall convention.

Her resolution calls on the provincial government to change the Public Schools Act so that individual school boards may use a variety of criteria and not age alone in developing school entry policies.

At present any child aged six before Dec. 31 may enter school, while a child born after that midnight deadline must stay home an additional year.

Her resolution is coupled with another to clear up problems at the other end of the scale.

At present a student who is 19 before Sept. 1 of the school year in which he wishes to enroll has to pay tuition fees.

The Greater Victoria board has a resolution for consideration at the convention calling upon the government to amend the Public Schools Act to make 12 years free education up to Grade 12 standards available to all citizens whatever their age.

"There's general agreement that age has little to do with a child's readiness to enter Grade 1 for formal schooling," said Mrs. Temple.

"If there were day-care centres and kindergartens for all under the public schools we would be better equipped to set up other criteria for entry.

"We would have the children for some time before Grade 1 so that we could have some way of judging their ability to stay in school or if they need to stay longer in preschool areas."

However, she pointed out, if a child is admitted to school after six because of his early lack of maturity, and takes 12 years to go through the school system, he would be faced with paying his own school fees.

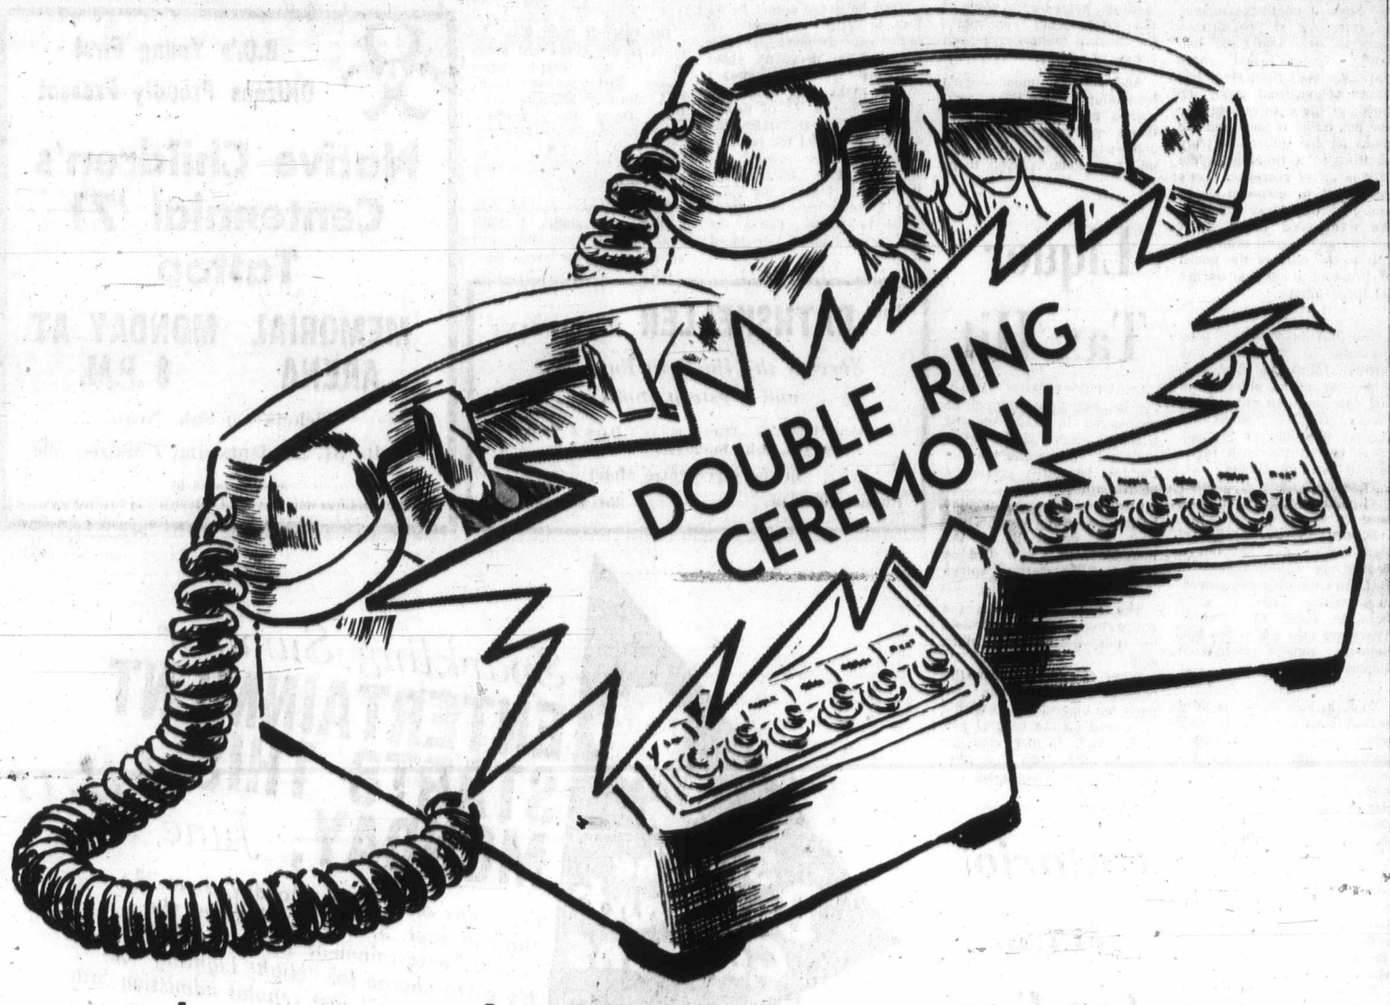

At the same time there are many children who are ready for school well before their sixth birthday, she said.

Cactus Tips

RELUCTANT CACTUS (E.L., Cordova Bay) — When a Christmas Cactus turns sulky and refuses to bloom, it is a good idea to set it outdoors for the summer — morning sun only — where wind and weather will ripen and toughen its pads and condition them for blooming.

Lack of an annual resting period is another common cause of stubbornness in the Zygocactus; the plant should be kept almost but not quite bone dry for six weeks, starting around the middle of October.

The most important factor governing the flowering of this plant, though, is the day length. The Christmas cactus is what is known as a short-day plant, because it requires the shortening hours of daylight in the autumn to initiate the flower buds.

If the plant is kept in a room where the lights are turned on during the evening hours, its day is lengthened artificially to about the equivalent of midsummer, and the plant fails to receive the required stimulus to start blooming.

SPIDER FLOWER (H.McQ., Nanaimo) — The name of the bedding plants you bought and planted is Cleome, pronounced klee-O-me, and its common nickname is Spider Flower.

These are very attractive and easy-to-grow plants, thriving in sun or shade. They stand about 4 feet tall, with big heads of pink flowers followed by spidery-looking seed pods, much valued for a unique effect in flower arrangements. The plant is an annual, lasting for only the single summer, but you can gather the dried seed pods in the fall for growing next year.

In addition to the usual pink flower, there is a pure white variety called Cleome Helen Campbell, named for the Toronto housewife who found the white-flowered sport growing as a self-sown seedling in her garden.

MUM SUCKERS (R.S., Victoria) — Those "suckers," as you call them, arising several inches away from your clumps of chrysanthemums, are perfectly natural shoots and quite harmless, and there is no need at all to uproot them as you would suckers from a lilac or a rose.

This is the natural way for some chrysanthemum shoots to extend themselves, and these "sucker" shoots or offsets provide an excellent opportunity to acquire more plants.

Dig down carefully and uncover the point where one of these mum shoots originates, and detach it carefully from the parent root. You'll find the shoot has quite a few young roots of its own, so this bit of chrysanthemum will take hold and grow away much more readily than an unrooted slip if planted elsewhere. In hot and sunny weather, such transplants should be shaded for their first week as independent plants.

KOHL-RABI CULTURE (O.J., Saanichton) — Most certainly it is not too late to put in seeds of kohl-rabi. In fact, seeds of this excellent vegetable may be sown from April right through to the middle of August, and it is best to make a series of small sowings to maintain a continuity of supply. Sow half an inch deep and two inches apart, later thinning the young plants to stand 10 inches apart.

You don't lift and store kohl-rabi as you would turnips, but leave them in the gound through the winter, pulling just enough for immediate use as required — they can take quite a bit more frost than most vegetables. The green varieties have a better flavor than the purple kinds.

Guide for Browsers

WASHINGTON — The summer is upon us and once again it is our pleasure to list recommended books for people to take on their vacations.

NON-FICTION

My Friends in the Press, by Spiro Agnew, Southern Strategy Press — a heartwarming memoir chock full of anecdotes concerning all the friends Agnew has made in the television and printed media since he has become vice president of the United States. Six pages. Reading time three minutes and 12 seconds.

Investing in Lockheed for Fun and Profit, an amusing and valuable book on how to successfully manage a large aircraft company. It was originally printed to sell for $3.95 but because of inflation and unexpected overruns it is now priced at $19.95.

One Thousand Reasons for Being in Vietnam. This three-set volume lists every reason ever given by a high government official as to why the U.S. got involved in Vietnam. It includes the pledges of four American presidents, the Gulf of Tonkin resolution, pacification, Vietnamization, incursions, and the secret Swiss bank account numbers of all the leaders the U.S. has supported in Indochina. Printed through the courtesy of the New York Times.

How to Take the Fun Out of Fun City, by Gov. Nelson Rockefeller. In this hilarious book Rockefeller recounts how he has played one practical joke after another on his good friend and fellow Republican, Mayor John Lindsay. Every time Lindsay thought he had something worked out for New York City, Rockefeller thought up something devilish to thwart him.

Lindsay is the perfect fall guy for Rockefeller's kind of humor and the reader is kept on the edge of his chair wondering what Rocky will do to him next.

State Income Taxes and Why We Need Them, by Gov. Ronald Reagan. The Governor of California writes with fervor on the necessity for state income taxes and why each citizen should be willing to pay them "even if it hurts." Citing case after case of people who would rather be on welfare or medicare, Reagan makes a strong argument against loopholes in the tax laws that allow some California citizens to get off scott free. The governor dedicates his book to his tax accountant.

The Sensuous Telephone, by "M." The wife of a famous attorney-general tells you what you can and can not do with a telephone. She describes various ways of holding the phone, the positions used when talking on it, pre-phone-foreplay or how to work up excitement before making a call, and finally, how to fake it when you don't get a dial tone.

Sydney Harris

1270 and All That

If one lacks a little historical perspective, it's hard to judge one's own time. Thinkers, especially, tend to take a severe view of their own age, possibly because their standards are so much higher and their vision so much keener than the generality of people.

* * *

Roger Bacon was one of the first "men of science" to come out of the Dark Ages. His life nearly spanned the 13th century — which some medievalists have called "the most splendid in the history of Western man." Yet Bacon would have been the last to agree with this verdict.

Although himself a religious person (much of his scientific work was done under the protection of Pope Clement IV), and a member of the Franciscan order, Bacon was imprisoned for 15 years, and his works were suppressed — including his demonstration of the "roundness" of the earth a full three centuries before Magellan proved it to be so.

In the year 1270, Roger Bacon put down his considered opinion of this "splendid era" in the flowering of Western civilization:

* * *

"More signs reign in these days than in any past age ... torn by the deceit and fraud of unjust men ... Pride reigns, covetousness burns, envy gnaws upon all; the whole Curia is disgraced with lechery, and gluttony is lord of all ...

"Let us see the prelates, how they run after money, neglect the care of souls, promote their nephews and other carnal friends, and crafty lawyers who ruin all by their counsel ..

* * *

"Let us consider the Religious Orders; I exclude none from what I say; see how far they are fallen, one and all, from their right state; and the new Orders (the Friars) are already horribly decayed from their original dignity.

"The whole clergy is intent upon pride, lechery and avarice; and wheresoever students are gathered together ... they scandalize the laity with their wars and quarrels and other vices. Princes and barons and knights oppress one another, and trouble their subjects with infinite wars and exactions ...

"The people, harassed by their princes, hate them, and keep no loyalty save under compulsion; corrupted by the evil example of their betters, they oppress and circumvent and defraud one another ... and they are utterly given over to lechery and gluttony, and are more debased than tongue can tell."

* * *

Bacon's books were condemned and unread by most scholars. It was not until three-and-a-half centuries later that his advocacy of experiment and quantitative measurement was heard. While his judgment of his own age scarcely differs much from what many think of ours.

Why 'Senator' Died

The rumors persist, grow stronger as they're fanned by word of mouth, that The Senator was forced off the tube by government pressure. The mendacity is being spread by some people you'd imagine would know better, since they include political science instructors at colleges and universities. NBC is growing weary of denying the charge, and I don't blame that network. The fact is the cancellation of that prestigious series cannot be blamed on any group of congressmen, but on their constituents. The public simply did not watch the show; at least not enough of the public did. Sadly, it drew the lowest ratings of any of the Bold Ones offerings.

It is no rumor that Cary Grant and photographer Nancy Holmes have a tender alliance going. Natch, she's young and lovely.

Oh, those terrible tales about two of the Partridge Family youngsters! Let me assure you they're untrue. I've been bombarded with mail asking about the death of young Susanne Crough.

The tale spread that she was killed in an auto accident, and the story was given such credence that a TV station refused to believe Susanne was alive and working until she phoned to assure the reports of her death had been grossly exaggerated. Susan Dey, of that same Screen Gems Show, asked me to report that she's just fine, too. Susan's been plagued by the rumor that she died from an overdose of drugs.

Chad Everett's suffering from a bum right leg. He's got that limb in a cast. Opening CBS's Medical Centre segments will explain it as a skiing injury, but dat's not da truth. Fact is Chad slipped on a tennis ball during a recent on-the-court session, ended up with a nasty sprain and some stretched ligaments. No, the doctor did not heal himself. He reported to the closest emergency hospital.

Desi Arnaz Jr. is making a lot out of his new romance with Lori Rodkin. Which has Patty Duke totally upset, absolutely depressed.

Campaign Aims To Halt Deaths

The provincial government is about to launch a province-wide advertising campaign in daily and weekly newspapers to bring home to motorists the "hard facts" of what can result from an impaired driving charge.

A statement issued by the office of Attorney-General Leslie Peterson Friday quote him as saying "the impaired driver who climbs behind the wheel is the worst type of offender and cannot expect any mercy in the courts of this province.

The statement added at least 50 per cent of highway fatalities in the first quarter of 1970 involved drivers who had been drinking. The information program is being jointly sponsored by the provincial motor vehicle branch and the B.C. Automobile Insurance Board in co-operation with the attorney-general's department.

Silent, Pleasing —They Are Victoria's Pride

By DON GAIN

They're silent, mostly, except when they're sighing in a breeze, whinning in a brisk wind or creaking in a gale.

Some of them, but not many, have readily noticeable distinctive odors.

They're long on texture but, except for young climbers, not many people treat them as "feely" sculptures.

Aside from their place in commerce and industry, it is in the visual world that trees make the most impact.

And here, blossom and bole, leaf and limb, twig and trunk, they present a wealth of visual pleasure. Some stand out as individuals — trim, prim, prickly, luxuriant, dramatic, droopy, spooky, stately.

Victoria has its share — perhaps more — of these wonders of nature that add their beauty and design to the local scene.

Pay Dispute Simmers

Police Morale 'Low'

Victoria police union said Saturday it will do "everything possible" at a key meeting Tuesday to help solve its contract dispute with the city—and outlined in detail a claim that a main part of the dispute is "dangerously low morale."

The quotations were contained in a statement issued by lawyer Charles Maclean, spokesman for the union, in response to one released last Tuesday by lawyer Edwin E. Pearlman, spokesman for the Victoria police commission's bargaining group.

The statement came three days before the first negotiation meeting between the union executive and the full commission, set for Tuesday afternoon in City Hall and requested by the union because of what it called "an apparent breakdown in confidence."

Morale Low

Maclean's statement said morale was shown to be "dangerously low" by a unanimous police union vote last Tuesday of no-confidence in the commission.

He said morale was "dealt a further blow" by Pearlman's statement.

The union spokesman said the commission's "attempts at calm and reasonable collective bargaining have consisted of two meetings". At one, the commission made no offer and refused to discuss union requests, and at the other "threw down a take it or leave it offer . . . and flatly refused to discuss union proposals."

No Settlement

Maclean also noted the commission statement said no Victoria settlement could have been reached until the Vancouver police pay rate was fixed in mid-May and added: "Victoria surely has the right and the duty to settle its own contracts with its own police force."

The union spokesman called this "curious logic"and apparently an attempt to justify commission policy of refusing to discuss the principles of parity.

He said the present deplorable state or morale in the force is caused by three factors:

- The "decline in the relative economic status" of Victoria and Vancouver policemen. The pay difference was only $8 a month in 1966 but, said Maclean, would be $123 if the present city wage offer was accepted.

First Class

He added: "The Victoria police are recognized as a first class force handling the full range of police functions but the commission seems determined that it shall be treated as something a good deal less than first class."

- The union has "little confidence in resorting to the mediation process due to its 1965 experience with the Mediation Commission, when police were awarded less than the city had offered.

The statement added the city "recognized the inadequacy" of that award by correcting the situation later and said the union is ready to go to "independent binding arbitration by a board consisting of nominees from each party under independent chairmanship."

- The union "fully recognizes its responsibilities to the public but feels the commission is using that very sense of responsibility as a weapon against policemen and their families. In these circumstances, it is scarcely surprising that the morale of the Victoria police force is at an all-time low."

Mass Meeting

Maclean's statement ended by saying the union executive will attend the meeting Tuesday to give the commission a first-hand understanding "of the seriousness of the present situation" and to do "everything possible to find a solution."

The police unions of Victoria, Saanich, Oak Bay and Esquimalt are seeking pay parity with the Vancouver area and plan a mass meeting Wednesday to discuss strategy. Clark Gilmore has been named mediation officer for the Victoria and Saanich disputes, at the requests of the two commission, while talks are delayed in the other areas.

The city offer, made and rejected last Monday, was a two-year contract with a 5-percent raise each six months.

Weddings

Johnston — Kellington

Reverend John Travis officiated at an attractive military wedding in Centennial United Church, at noon on June 5, 1971, when Luana Sylvia, daughter of Lieutenant-Commander Thomas Kellington, C.D. (Retired) and Mrs. Kellington, Victoria, exchanged marriage vows with Lieutenant (N) William G. Johnston. The groom is Executive Officer H.M.C.S. "Miramichi", and the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Johnston of Scarborough, Ontario.

Baskets of mauve, white, and pale yellow flowers and natural greenery decorated the church. Brother Officers of the groom in full military dress ushered the guests and formed the Guard of Honour, Lieutenant-Commander J. Bernard O'Reilly was in charge.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in her full length white lace gown with long full cathedral sleeves. The peau de soie front panel, and full Spanish lace, peau de soie appliqued, veil, featured dainty pearl embroidery that completely banded the full length train. Her cascade bouquet was designed of Better Times roses with a touch of matching straw flowers and white stamelias. Attendants outfits were designed and made by her sisters and Mrs. R. Van Neften, Matron of Honour, Mrs. Berna Davies and bridesmaid, Miss Janice Kellington, sisters of the bride, wore identical mauve pants suits, featuring ruffled nylon sheer pants, and crepe tops with long sleeves of ruffled nylon sheer. They wore matching wide brimmed hats, and carried cascade style bouquets of Hawaiian orchid carnations with pink sweetheart roses and purple straw flowers. Flower girl Barbara Van Neften was identically attired and carried a basket of similar flowers. Ring-bearer Master Paul Van Neften wore a white linen suit. Lieutenant Claude Lerbeux was groomsman.

For her daughter's wedding Mrs. Kellington chose an ensemble featuring a dress of pink sheer with long sleeves gathered at the wrist, topped with lace sleeveless coat, and pink hat. Mother of the groom wore an ensemble featuring a dress of blue and mauve triple sheer topped with a sleeveless coat of brocade. Both wore corsages of deep pink Sweetheart roses.

At the reception held at the Carlton Club, Mr. Alf Guayle proposed the toast to the bride. Telegrams were read from Scotland and Eastern Canada. For a honeymoon trip to California and Mexico, the bride donned a hot pants outfit of purple suede and white silk, embroidered trim, topped with a purple coat.

Smith — Lloyd

Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Lloyd of 1118 Hadfield Avenue, Victoria, B.C. announce the marriage of their only daughter, Sheila Wyn, to Mr. Peter James Smith, son of Mrs. J. Smith of West Vancouver, B.C., and the late Mr. Smith, on June 17, 1971. Miss Joanne Pearson attended the bride and Mr. Brian Bayly was groomsman.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith will reside in Campbell River.

Vigneron — Baker

Mrs. H. V. Bartholomew announces the marriage of her daughter Janet Baker of Buffalo, New York, to Mr. Alan R. Vigneron of Concord, Mass.

The wedding took place on Saturday, June 19, at the Marsh Chapel, Boston University, Boston, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Vigneron will be at home after the 30th of June at 46 Beechwood Road, Wellseley, Mass. 02181.

Miller — Syme

Mr. and Mrs. John Syme, 3475 Cardiff Place, wish to announce the marriage of their daughter, Jennifer Anne, to Thomas Andrew Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Miller, 351 Richmond Road.

The wedding took place in the Chapel of First United Church. The couple will make their home at No. 105 - 703 Esquimalt Road.

Simpson — Currie

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Currie, 2411 Trent Street, Victoria, B.C. are happy to announce the marriage of their second daughter, Fern Jo-anne, to Mr. Leon G. Simpson, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Simpson, 2040 Saseenos Road, R.R. 2, Victoria, B.C.

The wedding took place on Monday, May 31, 1971, at Kelowna, B.C. Mr. and Mrs. Currie will make their home in Victoria.

DeBeck — Cox

A double ring ceremony was solemnized on May 22, 1971, 3:30 p.m. at St. Christopher's Anglican Church when Kathleen Lynn, the elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Cox of Victoria, and Mr. Bruce Ward DeBeck, eldest son of Reverend and Mrs. Ward DeBeck of La Puente, California, exchanged vows, with the groom's father officiating at the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the petite bride was lovely in her floor-length gown of peau de soie which featured a chapel train, with high neckline and bodice of Venetian lace highlighted with pearls. She wore a Juliet cap of peau de soie outlined in pearls and carried a cascade bouquet of daisies, yellow roses and white feather carnations. The bride was attended by Matron of Honour, Mrs. Diane Doherty, her sister, Susan, and Betsy-Ann Henderson, cousin of the groom. All attendants wore floor length gowns of sculptured green nylon with full sleeves and high neckline and carried colonial bouquets of daisies. They wore daisies in their hair. Best man was Mr. Stephen Wakefield of Coronado, California; ushers were brothers of the groom, Peter, Eric and Keary and cousin of the bride, Christopher Searle.

A reception was held in St. Christopher's Hall. Grandfather of the groom, Mr. E. K. DeBeck officiated as Master of Ceremonies. Mr. William Jones proposed the toast to the bride. For going away the bride chose an embroidered full length velvet peasant skirt and vest with long sleeved yellow blouse entone. Her corsage was made up of white carnations.

Knight — Benham

A double ring ceremony was solemnized June 5, 1971 at 7:30 p.m. in St. George the Martyr Church, when Vicki Lynne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Benham exchanged marriage vows with Mr. Richard Knight, son of Mr and Mrs. D. Knight, Reverend Canon Bishop officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor length, empire-styled gown of white organza over taffeta with matching chapel veil. She carried a white Bible covered with rosebuds and trailing yellow daisies. Matron of Honour Mrs. Trudy Simpson and bridesmaids Misses Gwen Hopkins and Peggy Mulligan wore identical gowns of yellow organza over taffeta empire-styled, like the bride's. Patti and Sandi Collins were Junior Bridesmaid and flower girl, in white and yellow gowns of Swiss Dot. All wore yellow flowers in their hair and carried colonial bouquets of blue daisies. Best man was Mr. Bob Wells and ushers were Mr. Fraser Benham, brother of the bride and Mr. Fred Simpson.

At the reception that followed at the Olde England Inn, the toast to the bride was given by Mr. Elden Kier, of Duncan. The happy couple left on a motor trip to Florida. On their return they will reside in Terrace. There were several out-of-town guests from Calgary, Kelowna, New Westminster, Quadra Island and Duncan.

—Manley and Cynthia Smith and Family.

9 IN MEMORIAM

LENNOX — In loving memory of our dear son, Nicholas, who passed away June 27, 1967.
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent the voice we loved to hear,
'Tis sad, but true, we wonder why,
The best are always the first to die.
—Always remembered by Mom, Dad, brother and sisters.

Sunday Highlights

C-10:00 a.m. — A special on drug problems, done by church folk—5.

C-12:30 noon — The only sports highlight of the day is the final of the U.S. women's golf —4.

● 5:00 p.m. — Sesame Street viewers should watch this preview of a reading series due next fall from the same Street people—9.

C-7:00—Debut of an adventure series called High Road to Danger. Great title but that's all these things usually have—5.

4-28-71

"The news didn't seem bad —until he analyzed it."

● C-8:00—An hour of Sinatra doing the only thing he does well: singing. A similar hour is due in a week—2, 6.

C-10:00—The CBC reruns the Tommy Tompkins bush-life series—2, 6.

10:00—Fanfare salutes Fillmore East with music by the Byrds and others in the now-closing club—9.

Sunday Movies

1:30 p.m.—I Confess (1953 Hitchcock), Montgomery Clift, Anne Baxter. One of Hitchcock's poorer films but better than most others—5.

● 2:00—Rattle of a Simple Man (1964 dumb-guy-finds-life), Harry Corbett, Diane Cilento. One of the most enjoyable films you will ever see—12.

C-2:30—Underwater (1955 Jane Russell sinker)—7.

4:30—Tarzan's New Adventure (1936 Bruce Bennett) —7.

8:00—Once a Thief (1965 ex-crook in trouble), Alain Delon, Van Heflin, Ann-Margret. She's nice but she spoils every film she's in—7.

9:00—McGuire Go Home (1966 Cyprus-soldier drama), Dirk Bogarde, who distinguishes each film he's in—12.

11:15—Blood on the Moon (bloodless 1948 western), Robert Mitchum, other familiar faces. A waste of time—7.

11:30—Any Number Can Play (ridiculous 1949 gambler finds love and family), Gable, Alexis Smith. Count the cliches—4.

11:45—Room Service (1938 Marx Brothers, with Lucy). Aficionados snub this one but Donald "Jumping Butterballs" McBride is worth the price of admission alone and the brothers are always fine—2.

Sunday Radio

11:00 a.m.—John Barbirolli's last concert, with the Halle orchestra: Elgar's first symphony—CBU-FM (105.7).

12:00 noon—The Can-Am car race at St. Jovite, Que.—CBU (690).

7:35 p.m.—Opera Theatre: Beverly Sills' recording of Lucia—CBU-FM.

8:00—The weekly CBC program report—CBU.

Monday Highlights

NOTE: CTV starts its summer schedule by returning Wild Whirl of Fashion at 10:30 a.m., moving Yoga to 11:30, starting Summertime 100 at 12:15 noon and beginning Magic Den at 2:15 p.m. All are on Channel 8 and Magic Den, which could be good, is on Channel 6 as well.

C-12:30 noon—Love, American Style starts as a weekday half-hour, replacing World Apart—4.

C-5:00 p.m.—Baseball: Detroit at Baltimore—5.

6:00—A new NET series for knitters—9.

C-7:00 p.m. — More U.S. Senate hearings on mainland China—9.

● C-10:00—Nature of Things repeats Wild Africa As It Was, an excellent documentary. Part one now, part two in a week—2, 6.

CABLE 10 — 7:00 p.m., Ladies First; 7:30, Project Travel; 8:00, a must-see show on Music Victoria, with Robin Wood playing Chopin; 8:30, Outdoorsmen, sailing; 9:00, Canadian Forces Pacific; 9:30, Connections.

Monday Movies

NOTE: Several goodies this week, including Spiral Staircase, the original Cousteau and the uncut Citizen Kane on Friday.

C-8:00 a.m.—Anne of the Indies (putrid 1951 pirates), Jean Peters, Herbert Marshall, Louis Jourdan. Just think of frigates—4.

C-12:45 noon—Quebec (nauseating 1951 adventure), Corinne Calvet. Opposite end of the week, and the spectrum, from Citizen Kane—6, 8.

4:00 p.m.—Amboy Dukes (hopeless 1949 young hoods). Actually it's called City Across the River, introduces Anthony Curtis and dies—7.

4:30—Criminals Within (1941 war garbage)—13.

5:30—Blondie's Big Deal (1949). It isn't—12.

C-9:00—Woman Times Seven (1967 Shirley Maclaine and her men, merely fair), Peter Sellers, Michael Caine, Alan Arkin—4.

11:00—Monster Maker (1944 horror, more junk). Note KTVW is no longer showing 1 a.m. movies; note it and then forget it—13.

C-11:30—Tanganyika (1954 Africadventure, very routine), Van Heflin, Ruth Roman, Howard Duff. The Africa that is no more, bwana—7.

Monday Radio

11:00 a.m.—The CBC starts its summer schedule with Matinee at 11 a.m. and Holiday at 1:15 p.m.—CBU (690).

8:05 p.m.—Gala: Moussorgsky's Pictures—CFMS (98.5).

● 9:30—Memoirs of Victoria's Dr. John Helmcken—CBU-FM (105.7).

10:30—Theatre 10:30 has more Maigret—CBU.

● Recommended; C—Color.

250 HOUSES FOR SALE

3217 GLASGOW, $22,500
An extraordinary home at a very reasonable price
GARDENERS will appreciate the small backyard greenhouse, the variety of shrubs, trees and the huge lot (75x204').
HANDYMEN-MECHANIC-etc. will immediately reach for their deposit cheque when they see the large 14'x30' garage equipped with heavy duty wiring for electric welding, etc., plus the large workshop area in basement and the long paved driveway for extra parking.
LOCATION. Not a mile and a half from town, ½ block to bus, 3 blocks to Mayfair Shopping Centre, this is possibly the most convenient location in town, yet it has almost a country atmosphere.
THE HOME is superbly constructed of the very best materials featuring Inlaid hardwood floors, beamed ceiling in the living room and the dining room has a feature bay window plus entrance to the modern convenient pantry. The kitchen has a large eating area, large enough to accommodate a growing family should you wish to develop the attic at a future date. Presently there are 2 bedrooms and a sewing room, plus 2½ bathrooms, on the main floor. The home is in excellent condition with copper plumbing, heavy wiring, hot water heating and hookups for automatic washer and dryer. The owners are leaving for Australia or you would not have the opportunity to purchase this outstanding home now. Open for inspection Monday evening 7-9 p.m. or contact Ray Smith, 386-7755 or 388-6957 or phone Broadview Properties Ltd., 384-8001 (24 hours.)

(BROADMEAD BORDER)
Situated high up on beautifully landscaped grounds of .4 of an acre (nossible V.L.A.), with unobstructed views of the OLYMPICS and the Sooke Hills, this nice family home provides true country living yet is close to good public routes to town. With woods behind and a lovely little park of some character across the way. There are scenes of beauty and tranquility from most rooms. Three bdrooms, 1½ baths up with full development down of another bedroom, another bath together with recreation room and separate den and modern hot water heat — large sundeck and many other facilities for happy family living. By the way, downstairs can be developed for in-laws if desired.

About 5,000 ratepayers, or 30 per cent of the 16,500 eligible, cast their vote with 4,542 in favor and 316 against.

Cowichan Valley Regional District board chairman Bruce Devitt said "a lot of people worked hard for it and they should be commended on their efforts. I think the most important thing was that people of the regional district put aside their differences and some of the parochialisms and worked together as a team to get something this area really needs."

Devitt said the vote was a good illustration of what a community can do if it does work together. "I hope it is the beginning of more co-operation in other endeavors throughout the region."

Duncan Ald. and member of the Cowichan District Hospital Board, Jay Powley said "the vote showed that the welfare of the senior citizens is uppermost in the minds of people."

North Cowichan Ald. and member of the regional hospital advisory board Donald Morton said he was delighted.

"It is a complete vindication of the regional district board's support of all hospitals and it is evidence that the entire region can pull together if they are sufficiently anxious about facilities such as this. The tremendous percentage (93.4 per cent) in favor shows that the people want us to get the project finished as soon as possible," he said.

Morton added that tenders are expected to be called this October and construction of the extended care unit should be completed by the fall of 1972.

A Sunday sports vote held at the same time was also passed by a large margin. Voters in the unorganized areas of the Cowichan Valley Regional District approved Sunday sports by 82.4 per cent.

A total of 1,039 voted for the 197 against it. The city of Duncan and the North Cowichan municipality already have Sunday sports. The only two centres within the region without it are Ladysmith and Lake Cowichan.

Andrew, a Grade 5 pupil at Campus View elementary school, was one of seven Campus View pupils who submitted photographs to The Daily Colonist in a Victoria area elementary schools photography project.

The photograph taken by Andrew is of the new 17-storey, $4 million highrise apartment building currently under construction at the corner of View and Quadra Streets. The complex is to be a low-rent apartment building for senior citizens.

"The thing I liked about that one was the angle I took," Andrew said, in an interview. He said he was standing at the foot of the building and had to aim his camera straight upwards to get the picture.

Andrew, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Marton, said he used an old 35-millimetre Japanese camera to take pictures.

He said he would like to be a news photographer some day.

"It would be a pretty exciting job. I took a picture of this car smashup at the school but it didn't turn out. If I was a news photographer, I would like to take pictures of something exciting like a car smashup or something unusual like a rocket take-off or a Queen's visit," he said.

Purpose of the Colonist's elementary schools photography project was to acquaint budding photographers with the art of taking news pictures. Entrants were instructed to take pictures which would tell a story of their families, friends or community.

Last May, participating pupils were given advice on the basics of photography by Colonist photographer Jim Ryan.

The Colonist judged the photos, decided one of four submitted by Andrew was the best for newspaper publication, and sent back the others with comments to each student.

Strike Hits Production

Fear for Drug Supply

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia pharmacists are concerned they'll run out of prescription drugs unless a four-day strike-lockout at three major drug wholesalers is settled soon, says the president of the B.C. Professional Pharmacists Society.

John Little said there is a "real threat to public health if prescription drugs are not available when and where they are needed."

Mr. Little said the three companies involved in the strike-lockout normally supply 80 per cent of drug and sundry items to 500 retail outlets throughout the province.

He said the two wholesalers who are not involved in the dispute would be "hard pressed" to meet the demand.

Mr. Little said several eastern manufacturers with local depots will be able to fill part of the gap, but they did not carry the full range of items usually supplied by the wholesalers.

The retail, wholesale and department store union went on strike Wednesday against Western Wholesale Drugs, National and Pacific Coast Wholesalers followed with a lockout Thursday.

About 200 workers are involved in the dispute.

Unique Posters Earn

PARKSVILLE — A unique poster competition, pointing out the dangers of venereal disease, received some outstanding entries.

The competition, the first of its type in B.C., was sponsored by the Central Vancouver Island Health Unit.

Grand prize of $100 in the competiton was won by Timothy Dowler of Ladysmith. He is a student at Nanaimo high school. Second prize went to Sally Carruthers of John Barsby junior high school.

The contest was conducted at the high school level throughout the area served by the health unit.

In school district competition, Peter and David Blasco of Duncan were 1st and 2nd and received $25 and $10 respectively; Lillian Smith and Yolande Levesque of Ladysmith were second ($10 each); Garry Drake of Nanaimo was 1st and took the $25 and Beatrice Mar won $10 for second place; Tim Birnham and Kim Robinson shared second prize of $10 in the Parksville-Qualicum beach section; Michael Tanya of Tofino was 1st and Lori Matthews was second at Port Alberni. Special prizes went to G. Ratzinger in Lake Cowichan and John Laing in Port Alberni.

SEEING IS BELIEVING

How do you believe something you can't actually look at—like the audience for your advertising?

You know that some people out there buy and read our paper—but how many, where do they live, where do they shop for their copies, and how much are they willing to pay?

Best way we know of to "see" a circulation audience (and be sure it exists) is through the facts and figures of the reports of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

No problem to look over our circulation audience—just ask to see a copy of our latest ABC audit report.

No Special Rescue Force for Centennial Craft

Below Pilots, Cold, Empty Sea

By JIM BRAHAN

Once the 69 aircraft racing July 1 from London, England, to Victoria stream out over the Atlantic, they will be like trapeze artists performing without a net because there are no special rescue preparations made for any that may be forced to ditch, the Pacific Rescue Centre in Victoria told the Colonist Saturday.

"If any are forced down, normal search-and-rescue procedures will be taken from Halifax," the centre spokesman said.

He observed it would almost be an impossible task to guard all the planes on the transatlantic flight and explained there are not enough facilities for such a job.

"If any go down, they are going to have a tough time because it is a big hunk of water and a small plane is damned difficult to find."

He also noted that Mae West life preservers are of little use to anybody down in the North Atlantic because of the low water temperatures.

The race is only the third trans-ocean, trans-continent race in aviation history and is a major event in B.C.'s Centennial '71 celebrations. Prize money totals $175,000, with first-place finisher receiving $50,000 and the Prime Minister's trophy.

The centre spokesman said the planes will come under air traffic control from the United Kingdom during the first half of the trans-ocean flight, and under Gander, Nfld., the rest of the way.

"But if any go into the water, the crews could be in real trouble."

He explained that if a downed flyer is located, the search and rescue plane would drop a rescue kit which contains five packages. The two end packets are inflatable rubber life rafts and the three centre ones hold clothing, food and other rescue gear.

"All the packages are connected by nylon line, and when strung out it is more

Final Talks Snap

Net Fish Strike Begins

By DON COLLINS

A strike of 4,500 B.C. salmon net fishermen began on schedule at 6 p.m. Saturday.

Patrols of picket boats were reported moving into place in some areas during the evening. But many fishermen were far from their home ports and the job of picketing would be completed in stages, a spokesman for the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union said.

Victoria to Alaska

The final futile talks ran through Friday to 11 p.m. and lasted from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Saturday.

Jack Nichol of Vancouver, secretary of the union, said no further talks were scheduled.

Involved in the dispute are the fishermen's union, another union representing Indian fishermen — the Native Brotherhood — and the B.C. Fisheries Association.

Picketing — which will be scattered from Victoria to the Alaskan border — will include salmon fishing areas, fish camps, packer locations and processing plants.

However, picketing at the plants will be confined to the water and the shore workers will remain on the job unless the union finds that "unfair" salmon are being processed. Then a picket line would be put up in front of the building and the shore workers would be expected to honor it.

The union agrees that the plants can process salmon not caught by net, or by combination troller-net vessels.

The strike — first in eight years — comes about two weeks in advance of the fishing season's peak. It involves union demands for better payment.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Documents from the secret Pentagon war study show that U.S. military leaders were pressuring president Lyndon Johnson to expand the Vietnam war into Laos, Cambodia and North Vietnam in 1966 and 1967, Knight Newspapers reported Saturday.

The dispatch, as published in today's editions of the Philadelphia Inquirer, said that Johnson, his defence secretary, Robert McNamara, and other top civilian officials steadfastly resisted the military counsel. Large-scale invasion of Laos and Cambodia by allied forces did not occur until 1970 and 1971.

The article dealing with the papers also reported:

● The theory upon which the United States based its early involvement traces back to the administration of former president Harry Truman.

● That although Johnson told newsmen in 1966 that bombers were hitting only military targets North Vietnam, a secret Central Intelligence Agency report said 80 per cent of the bombing casualties were civilian.

● Then secretary of state Dean Rusk warned of "general international revulsion" if U.S. bombers raided Hanoi during a Canadian peace feeler to North Vietnam.

The report, said to have been culled from the Pentagon papers, was the second distributed by Knight Newspapers Inc. to the 11 members of its chain.

The report appearing in the Inquirer said Johnson resisted

War Secrets Pursuit

Pentagon Suspect Surrenders Monday

BOSTON (AP) — A lawyer for Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, describing his client as unequivocally innocent of any crime in connection with the Pentagon documents on American involvement in Vietnam, announced Saturday that Ellsberg would surrender at 10 a.m. Monday to the U.S. attorney in Boston.

Ellsberg, 40, a former Pentagon researcher and now a research associate at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, was sought on a federal warrant charging unauthorized possesion of top secret documents and failure to return them.

The warrants were issued at midnight Friday in Los Angeles.

Leonard Boudin, one of Ellsberg's lawyers, said at a news conference he had told FBI agents of the decision to surrender Monday and asked that they "refrain from their efforts to apprehend him."

"If the government would agree that if Dr. Ellsberg appeared today that he could be released in his own recognizance, then we would have no difficulty in having Dr. Ellsberg appear today," Boudin said.

Several hours later, a second lawyer, Charles R. Nesson, told newsmen that since there was no response from the FBI on the offer to have Elsberg appear quietly, his client would surrender as scheduled on Monday.

Nesson said the lack of response "indicates to me — I suspect at any rate — that the government, the FBI, is more interested in making a highly publicized arrest than they are in simply having Ellsberg come forward."

Meanwhile Ralph Rampton, assistant agent in charge of the Boston FBI office, said, "There is a fugitive warrant out for Ellsberg and I can only say that as long as he is a fugitive we will be looking for him."

Threat On Queen

YORK, England (AP) — The Angry Brigade, a mystery underground organization that has planted half a dozen terrorist bombs in London, threatened Saturday to shoot Queen Elizabeth on a royal visit to this ancient city this week. It was the second threat on her life in less than a week.

Buckingham Palace went ahead with plans for the visit Monday, but police immediately tightened security.

The Angry Brigade is taken seriously by police. The organization claims responsibility for blasts at the homes of a government minister and the head of Scotland Yard, among others. No one has been hurt in the explosions.

The city's 1,900th anniversary is being celebrated next week, and the queen and Prince Philip are to ride through the streets with an escort of mounted cavalry.

Fedosseiev File Appears More Baffling Than Ever

LONDON (Reuter) — The riddle of a Soviet scientist who disappeared in Paris a month ago and turned up in Britain appeared Saturday to be more baffling than ever.

One London newspaper, The Evening Standard, said he was a Jew, a distinguished space engineer, a member of the Soviet Space Academy and one of the most decorated of Soviet scientists in the last decade.

The Daily Telegraph said he was a leading expert on Soviet anti-ballistic missiles and that reports he was Jewish were not confirmed.

Both agreed that he was not Anatol Fedosseiev, the name by which he had been known since his disappearance, that he spoke fluent English and that he was born in Leningrad in 1910, making him 61. First reports had given his age as 52.

The British government remained silent on these conflicting reports, but informed sources said:

● So far as they knew, his real name was indeed Fedosseiev.

● He was not Jewish.

● He had never been a member of the Soviet Space Academy, though he had a "tangential" connection with it.

● He was a prominent electronics engineer.

● He was No. 2 in the technicians' section of the large Soviet delegation to last month's international air show at Le Bourget Airport in Paris.

Reports from Paris after Fedosseiev's disappearance last month described him as a top Soviet space scientist and a vice-minister. But after it was disclosed last Sunday that he was in Britain, informed sources said he was not a vice-minister and had no direct connection with the Soviet space program.

Official statements have said Fedosseiev was in Britain and had been allowed to stay. The Soviet engineer was believed still at a secret hideout somewhere in the Greater London area.

Rocket Designer For Russia Dies

Soviet Union disclosed for the first time Saturday that designer of nation's space engines was Alexei Isayev, who died Friday at 62. Isayev designed Vostok, Voshkhod and Soyuz units, as well as Soyuz-Salute lab now orbiting earth.

Some of the rarest coins in the world are the $20 and $10 gold pieces struck in 1862 at the short-lived New Westminster Mint. The Treasury Building, which housed a government assay office, mint and land registry office was located where the existing federal post office on the main street, Columbia, in New Westminster, now stands. Both the Mint and assay office were built and put into operation to take advantage of the tremendous finds of gold which were being made in the Cariboo during 1860 to 1861, and to alleviate the shortage of coins.

The New Westminster Mint

By JOAN BELLINGER

Miners, laden with gold dust, were obliged to send their treasure through American banking agents to San Francisco, where the first government mint was built in 1854, and where 15 private mints were already operating.

On Nov. 3, 1861, the Ss. Pacific set sail with gold dust worth $50,000, heading for San Francisco. Here the gold was assayed and made into ingots and coins, but the hard working prospectors and miners had no assurance that they were receiving fair exchange, and in all it was a hazardous business.

In fact the difficulties encountered in mining the gold were only part of the story. Transporting the gold to market was another, and in 1861 the astute Governor James Douglas, set up a gold escort for the miners. It made three trips with a great show of uniformed and armed escorts from Quesnel, via Lillooet, to New Westminster. The escort, however, met with failure for the miners would not make use of its services when the government could not guarantee safe delivery of the gold. Soon they either brought the gold themselves or made use of the new Barnard Express.

The governor could also see the benefits of establishing an assay office right at home, to prevent the profits from the shipping, insuring and assaying of the gold from falling into Californian hands. He also felt it would facilitate the collection of the proposed gold tax and thus discussed with the treasurer of the Colony of British Columbia, a Captain William Driscoll Gossett, the idea of a local assay office, in April, 1859.

The captain could see a great deal of merit in the suggestion, but thought that the office should be established in New Westminster, as more accessible to the gold fields, rather than the governor's idea of Victoria. Both towns were intensely interested in the concept as it would bring additional business to them and help with the coin shortage.

Miners were bringing in gold dust in unbelievable quantities — one man had $10,000 for five weeks work — and this must have acted as a spur for Captain Gossett received permission to have plans drawn for the assay office.

He called on the Royal Engineers, those intrepid men who did everything, from maintaining law and order to building the historic Cariboo Trail, to make the plans. In due course he received design for a building worth £3,400, but after much deliberation the canny governor reduced this estimate and decided on a building worth £400.

The Royal Enginers, under the command of Colonel Richard Clement Moody, completed the small assay office in May, 1860. Meantime officials had arrived from England, in the person of Francis G. Claudet as assayer, and Frederick Bousfield, as assistant. An operative melter and assistant melter, for experienced men were required for this operation, were also sent from England, and the assay office opened on Aug. 1, 1860.

The office was open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. except on the days when a steamer was to dock on the Fraser, probably loaded with eager miners and their gold. Then the office opened at 8 a.m.

The first ingots made had no value marked on them, but early in 1861 the assay office made ingots stamped with a number, corresponding to a number in the official records, and giving the weight and fineness, plus a government cipher — a crown over the letters V.R. An official certificate was given to the owner, with the weight of the gold before and after melting, stating the fineness and the assaying charges. Charges were 7s 6d for bars under 50 ounces and 1s 6d for additional 10 ounces. Assaying cost £1 for each specimen, while complete analysis of a mineral was £2.

For a while business boomed at the assay office, but soon many private assay offices were opened in the province, and the official office was not then financially self-supporting. By the end of 1863 the staff was reduced to one assayer and one smelter. The office finally closed by the end of 1867, and was officially abolished in 1873.

Meantime the outcry for a mint was growing. New Westminster, then the provincial capital, and with a population of two to three hundred, started a campaign for such an institution and was backed by the British Columbian newspaper, first published in March of 1860, and known as The Columbian. Victoria, now an arch rival in competition for the capital, had a similar demand in their papers for the mint to be established there.

New Westminster, though they lost the capital, won the battle of the mint. In 1861 Governor Douglas gave the treasurer, Captain Gossett, permission to send E. G. Claudet, the official assayer, to San Francisco to buy the needed coining machinery, as they did not wish to wait until such machinery could arrive from England.

A shrewd man, the treasurer made the most of his allotted money and purchased for a good price machinery similar to that used in small South American states. He bought a screw press, a rolling mill, cutting press and other pertinent machinery for $5,085, and this was shipped to Esquimalt.

From there the HMS Forward, a gunboat, landed the supplies at New Westminster. With the assistance of the sailors from the ship, the machinery was taken to the site, and housed in the mint building, a structure which had originally been erected to house exhibits being sent to the International Exhibition at London, England.

The history of the mint, is one of conflicts, flaring tempers and deep discouragement. Although the governor, known as a conscientious and able man, seemed to have been much in favor of the establishment of the mint up to this time, he suddenly changed his mind. He did a complete reversal of policy, and refused to grant the money to set up the machinery, and told the hard-working Captain Gossett that he would just have to store his machinery. Tempers rose and after much violent protest from the treasurer, who wasted no words in stating his opinion, Douglas finally agreed to the outlay of the unspent balance of the original Mint appropriation, about £1,500.

Captain Gossett was understandably delighted with this unbending, and he called on the Royal Engineers again to help set up the machinery, which they did with the aid of tars from the man of war. The plant was run by steam power except for the hand-run coin press.

When all was in readiness it was necessary to ask Governor Douglas for more — an engineer to run the plant. That did it, and Douglas flatly refused, saying he definitely did not wish the mint to operate. Perhaps it was because the assay office was losing money, but nobody really seems to understand his sudden change of heart.

The captain, a sprightly nervous man, was both furious and disgruntled. To him it had all been a bad experience, with broken promises and a great waste of time and money. His heart, however, was set on having coinage of the same diameter and value as the U.S. gold, and in a gesture of defiance he struck off some $10 and $20 gold pieces.

They were of unrefined gold of the fineness of .850. The $20-piece weighed 546 1-3 grains and contained 20 cents' worth of silver. The coins are simple in design and artistic, a credit to Captain Gossett, who designed them.

After hearing of the gesture of defiance, and after much more discussion, the governor finally agreed to £100 in British Columbia gold pieces being displayed at the London Exhibition.

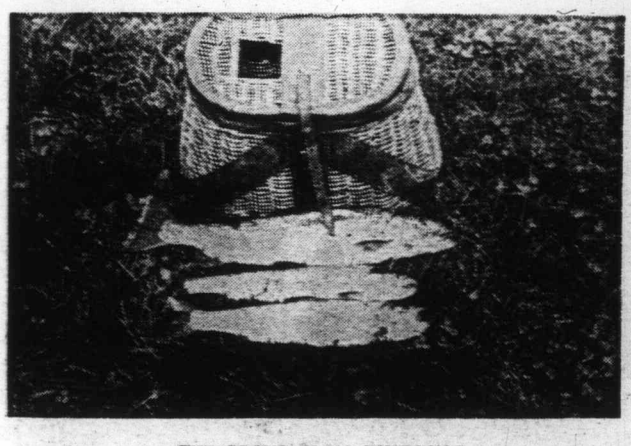

Then Captain Gossett applied for leave, and when he was granted six months, he left New Westminster. He never returned to the scene, and in the summer of 1863, when his leave expired, he tendered his resignation. The coining plant was never used again.

What became of the coins, which would have been such everlasting mementos of British Columbia's golden days? They became extremely rare and commanded large prices when obtainable. At a sale in London in 1903 the $20 piece brought £116. One was sold in Florida for $5,800 and another was in possession of King Farouk.

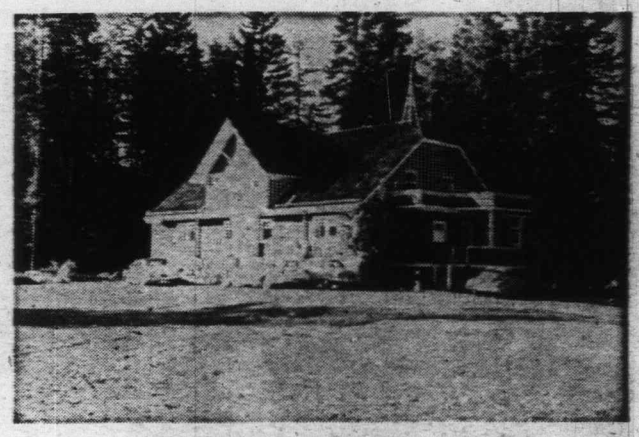

Thanks to the devoted interest of Albert Walker, curator of the New Westminster Museum, 302 Royal Avenue, these coins may now be seen and admired. He made a request to John Walker, curator of coins and medals at the British Museum, for electro-type copies of these rare coins, and the $10 and $20 gold pieces are now on display at the Museum.

The machinery from the mint was, as Governor Douglas had decreed "greased and laid away." In 1876 the boiler and engine were sold to the contractor constructing the B.C. Penitentiary and the rest was stored in a government attic.

The mint and assay office thus passed into the colorful history of the exciting gold rush days of British Columbia.

WOODLANDS LODGE ON SALMON RIVER

About Fishing Books

By ERIC SISMEY

Not long ago outdoors editor Alec Merriman reviewed a new, updated edition of A Book of Trout Flies, by Preston J. Jennings. Then comparing the two he went on to write that the original 1935 Derrydale edition was now worth about $100. Well, I have a mint copy. But it is not for sale.

I remember buying my copy at Dawson's Antique Book Shop, Grand at Wiltshire, Los Angeles. There were two or three others on the same shelf and in 1948 I paid something less than $5 for mine.

A few months after the destruction of the United States battle fleet at Pearl Harbor in 1941 I was transferred from the golden trout country of California's High Sierra, where I had spent 20 years, to the downtown Los Angeles office of the Southern California Edison Company.

At that time half a dozen small second-hand book stores were scattered along Sixth Street between Grand and Figueroa. They are gone now since tall new office buildings have taken their place.

It did not take me long after becoming settled in the city to find interest in these little book shops and to browse through them during my noon hours. Almost at once I discovered a Derrydale, two volume, Western Angler by Haig Brown. I think I paid $10 for the set. A pencilled note on the fly leaf records my purchase in 1943.

Imagine my excitement after I opened one of the volumes to find that the locale was centered around Campbell River, Campbell Lakes, Buttle Lake, the Elk River, Wolf Creek and . . . I had almost forgotten that part of the world.

I could hardly wait until reaching home in Pasadena to explore between the covers and to revive memories of that delightful summer, 1912, when I was a member of one of the first survey parties into Strathcona Park. And later, 1913-14, to accompany the late F. W. Knewstubb exploring the Cowichan, Stamp, Sproat, Ash, the Nahmint and other waterways for the water rights branch.

There were impatient years after 1942 and it was not until 1946 that travel restrictions were lifted and gasoline rationing abandoned that I was able to visit Campbell River, Comox and the Albernis again; renew acquaintance with friends I thought I had lost, and once more get the feel of a tyee dogging on the end of my line and see a jumping, silvery coho scattering droplets that sparkled like diamonds in the morning sunshine.

From the day in 1943 when I found the Derrydale Haig Brown's Western Angler until I retired some 15 years later many noon hours were filled with the search for fishing books and the results have been very rewarding.

One day's find might have been Sir Edward Grey's Fly Fishing and a day or two later Hill's Summer on the Test. As time went on two Skues, a 1921 and a 1924, were added to my collection and two by that dedicated dry-fly man, F. W. Halford. My copy of Going Fishing, by Negley Farson contains his Sage of the Salmon and his delightful description of living in a float-house on Cowichan Lake in 1921. Another find was a 1923 Hardy Angler's Guide, bought for 25 cents. I then paid $5 to have it bound. One will look far to find better colored illustrations of flies and other lures.

There are three Bergman books on my shelves, Van Dyke, W. C. Prime and a copy of Dry Fly and Fast Water by LaBranche. Charles Holder, the man who organized the Tuna Club at Avalon and who standardized the tackle acceptable at Campbell River, is nearby as is a Zane Gray which tells of tyee fishing at Campbell River in 1919.

There is a shelf of Haig Brown books, first editions all; an autographed copy of Panther with a personal foreword by Cecil (Cougar) Smith whom I met in Strathcona Park in 1912 and who guided me for tyee at Campbell River in the 1950s. Beside it, J. W. Dunne's Sunshine and the Dry Fly. This is a first edition too. There is an Andrew Lang and Pulman's Vade Mecum of Fly Fishing. My copy, the 1851 edition, tells for the first time, on page 132, of false casting as a means to dry the fly.

Mixed in with other Californians are my two delightful Ralph Bandidi books, long out of print. One, Veiled Horizons, is a 1939 Derrydale, my numbered copy is 517. The other Tight Lines, published in 1932. Bandidi tells of the thrills of giant tuna fishing in Santa Barbara Channel and in the blue water between Santa Catalina and San Clemente islands. The giant tuna disappeared in the 1920s, they have not been back for more than half a century but albacore and yellowtail frequent the same waters now to furnish the best of sport.

I have several Isaac Walton's Complete Anglers. One a fourth Major, 1884, leatherbound by De Sauty. This was not found on a back shelf, but was purchased with hoarded pennies. At less than a reasonable price I bought Marston's 1888, two volume Lea and Dove edition, the 100th of Father Walton. There is a Bagster's 1815 edition, leather bound, royal octavo, which came from shelves, dated 1826, of our ancestral home in Huntington and given to me in 1947 by my uncle Squire Herbert Sismey of Offord Cluny Manor.

Another Angler picked from a back shelf is Putnam's first American edition, 1847, and I have a facsimile of the rare 1653 edition. And close by is Williamson's British Angler dated 1740.

From where I sit I see Greased Line Fishing, by Jock Scott, and Fishing from Earliest Times, by Radcliffe. There is a Gervase Markham, Denny's Secrets of Angling and a Fisherman's

beautiful MONKMAN PASS

Can Albertans Lay Claim to It?

By GERTRUDE CHARTERS

Hidden in the mountains east of Prince George, not far from the Alberta - British Columbia boundary, the spectacular Kinuseo Falls roar 210 feet down a rocky gorge in the Murray River in undisturbed grandeur. A few miles higher up the mountainside, past lovely Monkman Creek with its series of some 20 smaller falls, the mountain-top jewel of Monkman Lake smiles in lonely serenity.

But you won't read descriptive raves of these scenic marvels nor directions on how to reach them in any Beautiful British Columbia tourist brochures. For the only road into them is from the neighboring province of Alberta.

To all intents and purposes this area belongs to Alberta's Peace River country settlers. Not geographically, not according to any official map perhaps. But it was discovered by one of these pioneers who was convinced he had found the long-sought solution to the problems of Peace River country grain growers: a short cut to the Pacific.

Unable to interest federal or provincial governments or the mighty railroads in his pass, he stirred up his neighbors to hew a trail through the foothill and mountain wilderness which reached Kinuseo Falls, nearly 90 miles west, before war put an end to his dream. And it is Albertans who camp and fish along that road today. Most British Columbians have never heard of the Monkman Pass and its scenic attractions.

You may wonder what Albertans were doing opening up a wilderness area in British Columbia without so much as a "by your leave." It's quite a story and surely unique in Canada.

Back in 1936, even as today, Peace River farmers agonized over the problem of marketing their grain with falling prices and ruinous freight rates. Their only outlet was a long roundabout rail line south and east around Lesser Slave Lake to Edmonton, then west to Vancouver, a distance of about 1,400 miles. This was not only frustrating; it was downright maddening when barely 150 miles through the low, easy Monkman Pass separated them from the B.C. highway system at Hansard.

For years petitions and delegations bombarded Ottawa and Victoria. But no one seemed to be interested in that far-off land of pioneers, log cabins and probably Indians and Eskimos! This in spite of the fact that samples of Peace River country wheat, oats, timothy and legumes had topped the world at the Chicago Fair. Millions of bushels of wheat were harvested annually but it was a losing proposition to ship any outside.

To earn some much-needed cash for his farm and his family of five children he went trapping each winter in the foothills and mountains of British Columbia. He was an experienced trapper and hunter and had been a fur trader.

From the days of his boyhood around Fort Garry when he had thrilled to the great buffalo hunts of his people, Alexander Monkman had sought and followed adventure. As a young man he was a well-known bronco buster and rodeo rider in Montana. He chased the elusive lure of gold in every mining camp from Montana to Edmonton.

There, in the summer of 1898 he heard of the Overland Trail to the Klondike. Unscrupulous promoters were enticing hordes of ignorant would-be prospectors to Edmonton with their nationally advertised claim of an easy overland trail to the Yukon. Once in Edmonton these gold hungry men were sold everything from blankets and grub to horses, mules, oxen and the weirdest contraptions on wheels ever assembled.

Most of these collapsed within a few miles but there was no money to buy more. Many men turned back and those who did not wished that they had. This non-existent trail wandered north through the Lesser Slave Lake district to the mighty Peace River and north of that to Fort St. John. But beyond the fur trading posts at Peace River and Fort St. John stretched some 1,500 miles of trackless wilderness. How many lost their lives in their attempt to penetrate it will never be known. But no more than three men are known to have succeeded.

Near Fort St. John Monkman realized that the so-called Overland Trail was a delusion and a death trap. He turned his horse around and headed back to the Peace River country whose rivers, lakes and rolling parkland had pleased him.

Near Peace River post he met traders Fletcher and Bredin. They hired him to choose a site and manage a fur trading post in opposition to the Hudson's Bay. The Indian trails crossed at Lake Saskatoon and here he built his post which later became the nucleus for a thriving settlement.

In the fall of 1922 his trap lines led him through a pass so low (3,500 feet) and so gradual he hardly believed he was on the Pacific slope until the rivers convinced him.

Thrilled with his discovery Monkman tried to interest the Grand Trunk Railway which was then considering a pass for its railway to Vancouver. He did succeed in conducting a survey party over his pass. But in spite of the engineer's enthusiastic report, politics and other factors decided the present Yellowhead route. So the Monkman Pass was shelved and forgotten by all but Alex Monkman and anyone he could get to listen to him.

One stormy night in late October, 1936, a meeting was being held in the community hall at Beaverlodge, not far from Lake Saskatoon. Crops were threshed but there was little joy among the farmers. If they shipped their grain to Vancouver over the rickety, roundabout Northern Alberta Railway they could end up with nothing but a freight bill to show for their year's work. There were no highways to Edmonton. Suddenly Monkman pounded the table and shouted:

"Aren't we all pioneers? Didn't we chop our way through bush, mud and muskeg, rotting river ice and worse, to get to this fertile land? What are we waiting for? Let's blaze our way out!"

And they proceeded to do just that. From Grande Prairie dirt roads led west past Wembley, Beaverlodge and Rio Grande to the Alberta-B.C. boundary. By spring of 1937 the vanguard of unofficial road builders had solemnly saluted the boundary marker and pressed on into British Columbia, clearing away the light timber with axes, saws, shovels and a couple of horse-drawn earth scoops. There wasn't a piece of road machinery in the entire outfit from start to finish — just good old-fashioned pioneer tools wielded with cheerful brawn and gusto.

What were 150 miles of foothill and mountain clearing if it would bridge the gap that separated their beloved Peace River country from its coast outlet?

The idea caught fire fanned by hope that even the depression couldn't smother. North and south of the Peace fairs, concerts, dances, sales, raffles were held to raise money for the project. If a farmer had no money, he gave his labor.

Signs appeared on barbed wire fences announcing: "This plot is for the Monkman Pass Highway." Or a steer would have the letters "M.P.H." pointed in barn-red on his hide. A truck would arrive at the camp site proudly bearing the sign: "We're from Notikewin (or Grimshaw or Cherry Point) doing our bit for the Monkman Pass Highway."

Merchants donated food, tools and equipment. Never before or since has the vast Peace River country witnessed such a solid community effort. Some help came from Prince George, Hansard, Dawson Creek and even Vancouver. But officially the road builders from Alberta were non-existent. They just kept pushing on.

By late September, 1937, 50 miles of very rough road had been cleared as far as Stony Lake. With 15 other men and women, my husband and I piled our bedrolls and grub into the hurricane deck of a two-ton truck to ride over the stumps and bumps to this lovely foothill lake with its mountain backdrop. An old abandoned trapper's cabin provided a stove to cook hot biscuits and stew. Our bedrolls were sheltered among the trees.

The following July a cavalcade of six trucks with 50 people, young and old, set out to view the spectacular Kinuseo Falls which we were told, could be reached mostly by truck but if this was not possible, horses would be provided to complete the journey. We were amazed to find the stumps all removed and a good dirt road to Stoney Lake. But the transformation of that unknown lake into a camping and fishing resort with three shiny log cabins, a pier for boats, and boats on the calm lake really took our breaths away.

But we had to go on to reach the falls before nightfall. The road was cleared of stumps but not quite ready for truck travel! Some streams had been pole-bridged, some not bridged at all, but the summer had been dry so water was low enough to ford with the truck.

After nearly 30 miles of this we reached the end of the road. But the only horse we saw was carry Jessie, our smartly turned out publicity lady who had promised us all horses. So we made packs of our bedrolls and grub and set out to walk the last 10 miles, young men and girls, older men and women, none of whom realized what it meant to carry such unweildy bundles over mile after weary mile of waist-high deadfall.

When we reached the Murray River it was dusk. It was all we could do to drop our rolls under the trees, smear our faces and hands with mosquito lotion and let the roar of the falls be our lullaby.

But weariness was forgotten next morning when we stood on the rocky bank and saw the stupendous fall of water, roaring down 210 feet between solid walls of rock 350 feet apart. Below the curtain of spray was tossed upwards about 100 feet, creating soft shimmering rainbows on the wet rock. We knew then that the Kinuseo Falls were one of Canada's scenic marvels.

A year later, August, 1939 ,we again boarded the truck to visit the falls. But what had been done to the road was hardly credible It was now passable to within three miles of the falls, not only for trucks, but also for cars. A guide met us with horses for all and we rode in comfort to a veritable dude-ranch aong the tall spruce trees above the falls.

Here were five shiny new charming log cabins, a larger log building to serve as a restaurant and recreation center and beyond these, stables and corral for horses. All this had been accomplished through the resourcefulness and vision of three young men from Beaverlodge, Bruce Alex and Rupert, who pooled their resources and stretched their credit to build a resort whose scenic grandeur was still unknown to British Columbians.

But there was more than scenery. In the waters of the Murray River, above and below the falls, fish were so numerous they seemed to leap at the bait. In fact the word Kinuseo is Indian and means "many fish." Above the falls a trail led past Monkman Creek to the summit and lovely Monkman Lake which could rival Lake Louise.

These enterprising young men had obtained a lease from Victoria to use the land for a resort. All summer long they were hosts to parties of business men, families, pioneers.

To the people of the Peace, this was their own resort, reached only by the road they had blazed through the wilderness of B.C., much closer than Jasper or Banff and more beautiful than either. So when the game warden from Dawson Creek, presumably on orders from Victoria, used that road to check for fishing licences among the guests, there was outraged resentment.

While Bruce used delaying tactics every sign of fishing tackle, every fish, including the mess of trout frying in the pan for lunch, disappeared to safety in a busy ravine. The warden found Rupert frying next morning's bacon-and-eggs-breakfast while a group of sober Sunday-school-type men relaxed reading weekold local papers. He must have smelled the fish and a few days later he came again. But this time there were enough licences to go around, with a bit of sleight-of-hand.

By the first chilly night of September the only guests left at the lodge were three women, Alice, Marion and myself. We had arranged for horses and guides to take us all the way through the Monkman Pass to the Herrick River, then by boat to the McGregor and so to Hansard and rail to Prince George. We hoped to be the first women to make that trip, if it stopped raining.

On the night of Sept. 2, sitting close to the little radio in the restaurant, we heard in shocked disbelief that German U-boats had sunk the passenger liner, Athenia, with a fearful loss of life. Britain was at war and Canada would not be far behind.

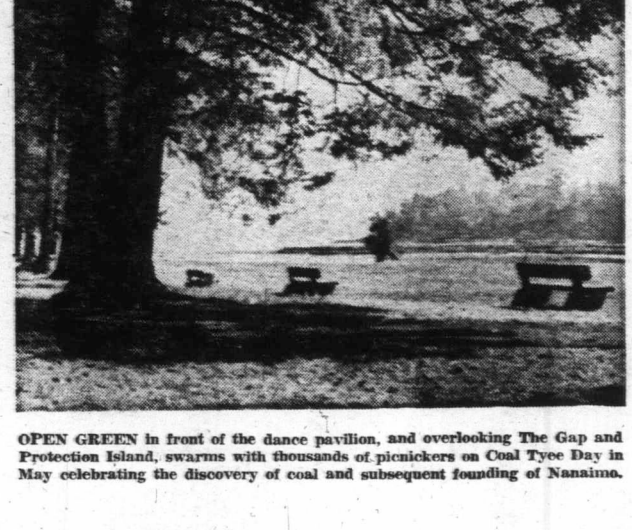

In that dimly lit room the sudden silence was like a blanket, smothering, choking. I looked at the three young men. Rupert, a veteran of the First World War and a reservist, stared grimly ahead. Alex stood quite still near the door, half his face in shadow. But Bruce, elbows on the counter, had hidden his face in his hands.

His bright Canadian dream was shattered beyond repair. Not long after the men locked their cabins and went to war. Bruce never came back. He gave his life in the skies defending Britain.

When the war ended Rupert tried to re-establish their resort above Kinuseo Falls. But Victoria informed him that the site had been frozen by the government for some unstated project. To date that project remains unstated. Nothing is left of the once promising lodge but a few disreputable cabins. In recent years the search for oil has built and maintained a good dirt and gravel road to Stony Lake and the Murray River, over the pioneer road grubbed out so painstakingly by the indomitable Peace Rive settlers in the hungry 30s. But few British Columbians have yet set foot on it. They are missing part of their heritage.

CARETAKER'S CABIN was constructed on Newcastle Island in 1931, when CPR developed the island into a huge recreational park. Grindstone is a relic of quarry activity of previous years.

NEWCASTLE ISLAND

PLAYLAND OF THE PACIFIC

The colors of the afternoon were rusts and ochres. The twisted oaks along the sandstone shore were browning, the large-leaved maples still green at the bottom, but yellowing as the crown ascended, and the empty branches at the tops etching silver rhythms through the crisp clear sky. Glowing orange clusters of berries fallen from the shiny-leaved arbutus, and curls of shed sienna bark arranged themselves in patterns across the limp golden maple leaves.

The stillness of the air gurgled with a flock of starlings pausing in the top of the highest Douglas fir as they debated their course, and then departed in a body across the green towards the south, leaving behind them the quiet of the afternoon.

The tabletops were gone now, and the windows of the caretaker's cabin boarded over; the concession in the pavilion closed until another summer. We sat in the protection of the driftwood logs on the beach and let the warm sun caress our cheeks with the final heat of the season, basking in tranquility as the bright sails with Yacht Club burgies traced their way through the Gap to race in the winds of the Strait of Georgia.

The Why-Not had been in need of a short spin to warm up the engines, and so, with half a package of fig newtons left over from August's cruises to feed us, we had sped away into a sunny September Sunday, across Nanaimo Harbor; past Gallows Point on Protection Island; over to check on the cormorants nesting on the sheer cliff face of Gabriola Island; and then back through the harbor to the docks at Newcastle Island.

We had often been here during the summer, to escape the routine of home and work, and had docked here when the four wharves were filled with Canadian and American vessels; when children in bright lifejackets fished for tiny pile perch from the docks, or paddled about in small dinghys; and when brave youths dove from the high ferry wharf at low tide to catch the attention of bikinied girls.

These were bustling times for the Island, as the small passenger ferry plied back and forth from the Arena on the city side, bringing picnickers with coolers and lunch baskets and children and dogs and grandfolks; bringing occasionally a tenter who was willing to backpack his gear to the secluded campsites; and inevitably on the weekends, bringing hoardes of too-young youngsters to carous the nights away until the dawns, then sprawl sleeping hither and thither on the greens through the mornings.

We had wondered, during these busy visits, what had been the background of this lovely island in the days when the huge dance pavilion under the sweet smelling fir had not been partitioned into disuse. We had asked ourselves who had made the wide paths that circled the Island Park, and by what fortunate circumstance the place had been preserved for pedestrian and marine traffic alone.

My curiosity took me to a meeting of the Nanaimo Historical Society. I had come to the right place. Judge Philpott of Nanaimo was the speaker and in his talk about the penal system in the pioneer days of the town, he quoted an item about Peter the Kanaka who was hanged in 1896 on the shores at the foot of the court house steps on Front Street. Could this be the Kanaka of Kanaka Bay on Newcastle?

I mentioned my interest in Newcastle Island. One gentleman told me that he had a file on the subject and would be glad to oblige my curiosity. When he arrived at my home one evening a few days later, I was expecting to hear a few interesting tidbits or legends. However, after two hours of solid facts my brain was swimming with dates and items that related to Newcastle Island for the last busy 120 years, and I was left with an armload of carefully accumulated and documented facts on the subject, which I was welcome to peruse.

These files told of the discovery of coal in Nanaimo by Coal Tyee in 1849, and of 50 years of flourishing mining activity on Newcastle Island. They told of the coming of the Kanakas from the Sandwich Islands of the south Pacific to the labor of the mines in the days when the Hudson's Bay Company was the pioneering force in the west.

The files told of the use of the island before the coming of the white man as an Indian burial ground, when it was their custom to place the bodies in boxes in the sandstone caves on the Departure Bay side; and of a report from April 26, 1890, indicating continued use for this purpose. It was reported at that time that skulls and bones were falling out of their boxes, and that dead bodies "buried" near the Gap "emitted a sickening odor."

More file folders documented 80 years of rock quarry activity on the sandstone cliffs of the island, and told of the development of the recreational facilities by Canadian Pacific Railways. Also included were indications of a thriving community of Japanese who operated a cannery and fish salting plant along Exit Channel, and established a large shipyard on the island which they operated for 30 years until the outbreak of the Second World War!

My guest was John Cass, Nanaimo's amateur historian. His armload and headful of facts on previous times on Newcastle Island was just one tiny facet of the material he has collected and documented over the past 10 years concerning the history of Nanaimo. It seemed that each simple question that I would pose involved such a complexity of dates and events that I would never comprehend.

The following day I arrived home to find Mr. Cass sitting on my front steps engaged in historical conversation with the children, and bearing additional reference matter for myself along with another hour of facts gleaned from his many hours and days in the files of the newspaper records.

It was with several of these files that my husband and I sat that sunny Sunday on the shores of Newcastle Island with our fig newtons, pondering the past, debating the locations of the various points of interest, and imagining the people who worked and pleasured here in former days.

The large open green by The Gap is used in the summer time for group picnics, when gunny-sacked racers hobble about and frisbee circles form. Tots paddle in the ample wading pool. Pounds of wieners are roasted on the covered cook stoves and served to groups lounging on the grass or at the mossy-roofed tables. In another

"The thing I most wanted to do before leaving Africa was to climb Mt. Kilimanjaro—and I made it!" said Dr. Douglas Roberts, a Victoria physician who last year made the trip to that land with his wife and family. "It was a must for me . . . I suppose something like kissing the Blarney Stone is if you go to Ireland."

Dr. Douglas Roberts with some of his African souvenirs.

Climb to the Highest Peak

"Actually, the British started the practice," he explained. "It has since become an annual event that has somehow been invested with an aura of romance and prestige."

For the past decade the annual assault has been under the leadership of Major General S. Sarakikya, chief of the Tanzanian People's Defence Forces. It was on his invitation that Dr. Roberts joined the expedition that took five days and involved walking a distance of about 70 miles.

Mount Kiliminjaro, an extinct volcano, is the highest mountain in Africa and included in the world's 10 highest.

"This mountain has always had great significance to the Africans," said Dr. Roberts. "They believed it to be one of the homes of the gods, and it is indeed an impressive sight. Its summit is covered with ice and snow the year round and much of the time is invisible because of cloud cover."

The mountain has two peaks; Kibo at 19,340 feet and Mawenzi at 17,564 feet. Kibo is beautiful, like a slanted plateau. But Mawenzi is scraggy and scarred.

Local cartoons and postcards depict the legend that Kibo was cooking a meal over a fire, but Mawenzi had no food. She plotted, therefore, to obtain Kibo's food. So she went to Kibo and asked for a brand to light her own fire, smelling appreciatively the while at the lovely soup that was cooking.

Lazy Mawenzie soon extinguished the brand and went back for another, hinting for more soup as well. On the third trip back Kibo became angry and hit the wily Mawenzi again and again with her large club, crushing and cracking her into the form she is today.

Although it is lower, very few people attempt to climb Mawenzi peak. Special gear and training are needed to make the difficult climb.

Kibo peak is divided into two points: Gilman's and Uhuru. Eighty per cent of those attempting the climb succeed as far as Gilman's point. The top 20 per cent (Dr. Roberts among them) make it to the top of Uhuru point.

The mountain has present-day significance as well as legendary fame.

Uhuru means "freedom" and on that point is enshrined the Uhuru Torch and the Arusha Declaration.

The Uhuru Torch is the one that was carried by runner throughout Tanzania to announce the granting of independence by the British administration in December, 1960. The Arusha Declaration is the Tanzanian Socialist Manifesto written by President Julius Nyere and presented to the nation in 1967.

Dr. Roberts made the climb in January, Africa's hot season. The first part of the trip, across "the saddle" between the two peaks, is made without a guide. There is no trail but the way is marked by piles of rocks along the way. An interesting meeting took place along here when Dr. Roberts met two men from Canada. Conversation disclosed that they were from his boyhood town of Ceylon, Sask., and knew his grandparents.

"There is good reason for the choice of this hour," explained Dr. Roberts. "The journey is made in pitch darkness with just the lanfern of the guide to follow as he zig-zags across the face of the mountain. Daylight reveals a climb so steep that had it been attempted in the daylight many would have turned back because of nervousness."

Actually there is no real danger until near the top. But their guide had been 20 years on the climbs and had made the trip more than 600 times.

The custom of crowning the ones who succeed in reaching Uhuru's point is the highlight of the trip. On their way up the mountain the guides pick the leaves and flowers of the "everlasting plant," so named because its foliage remains fresh for many days after it is picked. It grows only above the frost level. As they go the guides weave it into wreaths for the crowning ceremony which takes place at the last hut on the return journey.

Dr. Roberts was serving in Africa as a member of CAFATTT, the Canadian Armed Forces Advisory and Training Team. Tanzania and was in Africa nearly two years. For the past five years the team has been advising and assisting in the development of the Tanzanian Land and Air Forces. The program expired in January, 1970, and Dr. Roberts and his family were among the last Canadians to leave.

Though Dr. Roberts volunteered to go to Africa and would have been glad to stay longer he is very happy to be back again in Victoria where he and his family live at 2065 Ferndale Road.

His own medical practice, anchors him here for the present at least.

"I'm glad I didn't miss the opportunity to go to Africa . . . and I'm glad to be home, too . . . and, after all, B.C. has plenty of mountains."

ABOUT FISHING BOOKS

One day, on the very back of one of the little shops, high on a musty, dusty shelf and lit by a dim naked bulb was a first edition of Emily Carr's Klee Wyck and not far away a first edition of that delightful book, Golden Days, by Romilly Fedden. I nearly forgot my 1901 edition of Fly Fisherman's Entomology by Ronalds, and three different editions of Dame Juliana's Fysshynge wyth an Angle, and a somewhat worn copy of Bibliotheca Piscatoira, dated 1883.

Through the 1950s a favored stream of mine was the Salmon River north of the Campbell. Year after year I stayed at Woodland's Lodge operated by Harold and Kay Stafford. There I shared the very best of fishing in sea, in river and estuary with much loved companions. Companions that Father Isaac Walton would have taken to his heart.

One evening, probably around 1956, after dinner conversation had turned, as usual, to fishing and books and flies, one young man, Monte Drake, mentioned how much he would like to own a Haig Brown, Derrydale Western Angler. The price, he complained, was always too high.

"Would you pay $30 for a boxed set, in good condition?" I asked.

"Good Heavens, Eric!" he exclaimed. "Did you say $30?"

"Yes," I replied. "There is a set, or rather was a set 10 days ago, in the Caravan Book Shop on Grand, between Sixth and Wiltshire."

"Buy it for me as soon as you get back!" he almost demanded.

I did.

There is a strange little volume within my reach entitled Mysteries of Angling Revealed. It was written by Albert H. Pepper of Vancouver, 1937.

It is inscribed — "For the man who caught fish in Knudson's," and this salutation is followed by the book plate of: M. Tyrwhitt Drake.

LEMON GIVES LIFT TO SEA FOODS

MURIEL WILSON'S Thought for Food

"What is so rare as a day in June? Then if ever come perfect days . . ." Of all the year's 12 daughters . . . June is the fairest of them all. She wears a garland of roses in her hair and bears bountiful gifts from the garden in her hands. June brings strawberries and delectable vegetables from our local gardens. Not the least of these are little new potatoes.

Although potatoes are frozen in many forms, so far, the deep-freeze wizards have not been able to give us out-of-season flavor in freshly-dug potatoes. When we lived on Salt Spring Island and grew our own, we used to start eating new potatoes when they were little bigger than golf balls. I used to filch a few small ones from each hill long before it was time to dig them. They were small but wonderful eating pleasure. You would almost think they were a different vegetable from winter mature potatoes.

No need to peel the tiny ones, just a bit of a wash and most of the skin comes off. What doesn't come off won't hurt you. And don't cook them too long.

I suppose the pioneers of early western history, who sometimes had nothing but potatoes to eat, grew tired of them . . . and probably their method of cooking, in large quantities of water, had something to do with their disenchantment with potatoes.

Today we cook vegetables in the smallest possible amount of water to retain all their natural flavors and we use little tricks of embellishment for eye appeal and flavor Simple boiled potatoes are transformed by adding a light touch of chives and the lively flavor of fresh lemon which lift them to new heights of flavor.

LEMON-CHIVE POTATOES . . . 2 pounds cooked new potatoes, ¼ cup butter or margarine, 4 tsp. chopped chives or green onion tops, 1 tsp. grated lemon peel, 2 Tbsp., fresh lemon juice, ½ tsp. salt and ⅛ tsp. pepper. Cook potatoes in a small quantity of boiling salted water.

Now melt the butter in a large skillet, blend in chives, lemon peel and juice, salt and pepper. Add well-drained potatoes (actually there shouldn't be much liquid left by the time they are cooked), stir gently to coat with butter mixture. Cover and shake the pan a bit. Delicious served with poultry or sea food but good at almost any meal, they compliment whatever they are served with.

In every great cook's bag of tricks you find the fresh lemon, how come? Leaf through any good cook book from Betty Crocker to Julia Child and up pops fresh lemon on many of the pages. Why? Because it can make the difference between good and great.

The fresh, sharp taste and aroma of lemon can enhance a sauce, a dessert, most vegetables and a main dish. And good cooks like the great look of lemon . . . fresh glistening wedges on a platter of fish, or the rim of a glass; or nestled among vegetables to create an artistic triumph.

Fresh lemon adds a lively lift to the fish and sea food parade. Now is the time when weekend fishing is at its height so we give you an interesting and delicious way to cook those trout or grilse.

LEMON FRIED TROUT or GRILSE . . . 8 fish, ¾ cup lemon juice, 6 slices bacon, ¾ cup dry bread crumbs, 2 Tbsp. grated lemon peel, 1½ tsp. salt, ⅛ tsp. pepper, ¼ cup chopped green onion tops, 2 Tbsp. chopped pimento and lemon wedges. Wash and dry fish, dip in lemon juice and let stand 10 minutes. Saute bacon until crisp, drain and reserve drippings. Combine bread crumbs, grated lemon peel, salt and pepper. Roll fish in seasoned bread crumbs and fry in bacon drippings just until brown and crisp and fish flakes easily with a fork, turning once. Crumble bacon and combine with chopped onion and pimento. Arrange fish on hot platter, sprinkle with bacon mixture and garnish with lemon wedges.

And if it's salmon that man brings home, try this recipe . . .

SALMON STEAKS DIABLO . . . 6 salmon steaks, ½ cup prepared mustard, ¼ cup lemon juice, 1 tbsp. grated lemon rind, 1 tsp. salt, dash cayenne pepper, parsley butter and lemon quarters. Wipe salmon dry and place on cold broiler pan. Combine mustard, lemon juice, peel, salt and pepper, blend until smooth. Brush a thick coating on steaks and place under broiler 3 to 5 inches from heat. Broil about 5 minutes. Carefully turn steaks on original spot in broiler pan. Brush with remaining sauce. Broil another 5 minutes or until fish flakes easily with a fork. Serve sizzling hot with a pat of parsley butter and lemon quarters.

BRIDES' CORNER

Lemons are Romeo to any fish.

Fresh, zesty lemon juice adds just the right tang to any fish sauce.

For any fish not rich in fat. try lemon butter. Also use lemon butter as a basting sauce for barbecued fish.

Put a few lemon slices or some lemon juice in the water for poaching fish, add spices for gourmet touch. Lemon flavors and keeps fish firm.

DEAR HELOISE:
My neighbor's boat dock has old tires attached on the side to keep boats from slamming into it. I'm sure you have seen tires used like this, but the way my neighbor has attached them to the dock is most unusual.

This clever-thinking young man made a flap on each tire by cutting a rectangular section from ONE SIDE, extending it up to the tread.

Then he nailed these "flaps" to the dock. Easy as can be, and the tires lie flat as a dollar against the dock side. Saves a lot of rope and looks much neater.

Beat egg whites until very stiff but not dry, fold into egg yolk mixture along with crushed candy. Spoon into freezer tray or paper cups and freeze until firm. Remove from freezer 10 minutes before serving.

Let your freezer do the work . . . these are light and refreshing summer desserts.

LEMON ICE REFRESHER . . . ½ envelope unflavored gelatine, ½ cup sugar, ¾ cup water, 3 medium egg whites, 1 Tbsp. finely grated lemon peel and ½ cup fresh lemon juice. In a small saucepan, mix together the gelatine and ¼ cup of the sugar, blend in water. Bring to a boil, stirring until gelatine is dissolved, set aside.

Beat egg whites in small mixer bowl at high speed to soft peak stage. Gradually add remaining ¼ cup sugar, beating until stiff but not dry. Continue beating while adding the warm gelatine in a thin steady stream. Beat in lemon peel and juice. Pour into freezer tray or shallow pan and freeze until mushy, stirring once or twice. When mixture is evenly frozen to mushy stage, transfer to large chilled bowl. With chilled beaters, beat at high speed until smooth and light. Return to freezer tray and freeze until firm. Makes about 6 servings. 1 serving about 65 calories. Weight watchers will appreciate this dessert.

Lemons and oranges together were the first proven source of vitamin C. This was demonstrated in the year 1747 by a man called James Lind, a British ship's physician and led to the adoption in 1795 of a regulation that lemon be supplied daily to men at sea in the British fleets.

The term "limey" for a sailor came from the substitution of limes, which although less satisfactory than lemons, were more available in some tropical ports.

JUST FOR CATS

DEAR HELOISE:
I have a pet cat and, as you know, cats like to go under things. My cat's favorite spot is under the couch.

FOR THE BIRDS

DEAR HELOISE:
I found a way to save the cost of buying a bird feeder and now have extra money to buy food for our winter birds.

I took an old plastic pail (discarded because it leaked) and cut most of the sides away, leaving four vertical "slats" to join top and bottom, and also leaving a rim at the base for the birds to perch on.

With a length of picture wire, I hung the pail on a small branch too tiny for cats or squirrels.

The birds love this feeder, and it took less than 20 minutes to make.

Every year I get a package from Mom that is called her "cure for boredom." In the package are paint-by-number sets (which she knows I love), remnant materials with matching thread, a book or two, etc. And does it ever give me a lift!

This can be applied to almost anyone who is dear to you by just adding something you know they are interested in. Not only good for boredom, but for stay-at-home mothers with small kiddies, elderly folks, or those who are ill.

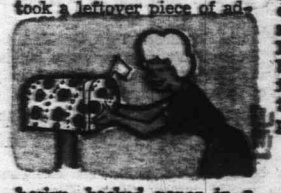

Such a thoughtful gift to fill in those dreary days that occasionally hit all of us . . . when we really need a bit of tender, loving care.

SPECIAL DELIVERY!

DEAR HELOISE:
We must use rural-type mailboxes on our street — the kind on a post. Well, after umpteen years, they can look pretty sad.

To spruce ours up a bit, I took a leftover piece of adhesive-backed paper in a pretty flower print and covered the mailbox with it. Then painted the post underneath to match. Not bragging, you understand, but we've the freshest-looking box on the street!

REFLEX ACTION

DEAR HELOISE:
If you have a kitchen sink that faces a blank wall, put a mirror on the wall. An inexpensive 9" x 11" mirror is just about right.

And tilting it on one side (with a wedge) sometimes gives a glimpse of another room in the house.

Will sure give you a different "outlook" — both in scenery and in washing dishes!

WASH OR WEAR!

DEAR HELOISE:
I reserve one corner of my closet for clothes that are "candidates" for the wash or for the dry cleaner.

Frequently I throw clothes in the washpile, then don't wash for a few days, and in the meantime wish I had the item back. Same with my dry-cleaning pile. These items frequently could have been worn once more—especially if it is a blouse that can be worn under a sweater or a sweater that can be worn under a vest, etc.

When I am finally ready to wash or go to the dry cleaner, I just quickly check the "candidate" corner of my closet.

MEXICAN TOM and the KID

As Told to LUCY BOWDLER

By REV. R. H. PURDY

Although much has been written about the early days of the Queen Charlotte Islands, it is doubtful if they dealt with two more colorful characters than "Mexican Tom" and "The Kid." Tom was christened William Thomas Hodges, though few people knew it; "The Kid" was Reginald H. Purdy, who entered the ministry after a full life as cattle rider, Mounted Policeman and City of Victoria policeman.

It often happens that one man's bad luck is the foundation for another's success. Alexander MacKenzie, a Hudson's Bay Company factor became, in 1878, the first white settler of the Charlottes. He had a dream: to build the first ranch on Graham Island, where there was mild weather, a super-abundance of grass and simply no cougars, wolves or rattlesnakes at all.

Surely these combined assets must have lulled MacKenzie into believing he had found a ranch Utopia. So great was his enthusiasm that the big drawback — no market except by shipment to the mainland — eluded him. When the moment of truth arrived and it was time for his first shipment of 20 steers, MacKenzie chartered a tug and doubtless thought he had it made.

But a fierce storm met them, making a landing impossible. The poor animals were pushed overboard in the hope they would swim to shore. A few did, but the rest drowned. This broke MacKenzie's heart. He never went back to the Island.

On the heels of this disaster came a very determined man up the Pacific Coast with one burning ambition: to build corrals and round up the wild cattle he had heard about, — MacKenzie's 400 — running around the Island. He managed to wangle some financial backing with which he hired a tug to ship feed grain to Masset. He was known as "Mexican Tom" and if he were around today he'd be called "far out." Never seen without his big Stetson hat with its 32 black and white horsehair braided hat band and his twin Colt revolvers he must have presented quite a sight to the natives.

His corrals arose, with wings from the north beach and the east coast, but by the time he was ready for his wild guests they were not about to be captured. They entered the corrals according to plan, but roared right through. Mexican Tom tried several times before he abandoned the attempt. and the cattle won the first round.

But Tom was still enchanted with the Island and went down the east coast to the Tlell River, where he found large flats, plenty of water, shelter and grass up to his stirrups. Again his buildings and fencing went up and this time the cattle stayed.

Three years later, in 1904, a wealthy Englishman came to Masset and was so taken with Tom's holdings that he offered him a large amount to sell out. Money was always tempting to Tom, who occasionally spent quite a bit of it on drinking bouts. So this William Cood's offer was too tempting to refuse and a deal was consummated.

Off went Tom, south to Sandspit on Moresby Island. (It was a far cry from the Sandspit of today with its airport, hotels and motels; where loggers come to work in Yakoun and Juskatla when Tom settled there in 1904.). He found nothing but endless grass and sand, but as usual he saw the possibilities and went to work.

That was a very bad winter . . . twice as bad for an amateur like William Cood. The dreadful storms that lashed the Tlell River brought high water and destruction and the end of the Englisman's ranching attempts.

He went to visit Mexican Tom, who seemed to be a sort of magnet to him, when spring came, and offered him a $1,000 to trade places. Again the money won out with Tom and he returned to Tlell River.

About this time Mexican Tom decided he needed a wife. He couldn't read or write but he found a friend at Skidegate to write to the Lonely Hearts column of an American newspaper.

Mrs. Flora Burns, a widow from Washington, became the first white woman of the Island and Tom's bride.

After the boat arrived with her, everyone wondered who would marry them. There was neither minister nor priest on the Island and this was serious because in those days two people did not housekeep until they were married!

To the rescue came the boat captain, who took the couple and all settlers present three miles out to sea where he had the authority to perform the ceremony. On their return to shore a great celebration ensued before Tom and his mailorder bride left for Tlell River.

Early in 1909 many settlers came to Graham Island seeking land, in response to government bulletins that glowingly described "vast areas of open land ready for the plow." It was a cruel deception as the "open land" was nothing but muskeg that was often several feet deep.

Mexican Tom and mail-order bride, 1905.

Young Reginald Purdy, tall, husky and 15, arrived at Skidegate with his father and uncle — victims of the government's false advertising. They found recorded pre-emptions covering all waterfronts registered in the names of various lumber companies and quickly realized a settler could only stake his claim a half or even a full mile back of the water.

Mexican Tom happened to be at Skidegate that day and when he saw the six-foot teen-ager he took an instant "shine" to the boy, dubbing him "The Kid" — the name that stuck to Reg. Purdy as long as he was on the Island. Tom urged him to go with him to his ranch and while the Kid longed to become a cowboy, his father refused his permission. However, he did allow the Kid to ride with Mexican Tom for one week — an unforgettable experience for the boy.

Meanwhile his father and uncle bought out a family who wanted to leave the Island. The Kid's Uncle Harris was a master carpenter and axe man, and the three men built a log house, in which they were happy and comfortable until the Kid's father unfortunately died the following year. He was laid to rest in a coffin of whipsawn lumber, built by Uncle Harris, and with all settlers present, the first Masonic funeral with full rites took place on Graham Island.

Misfortune still dogged the Kid. Unhappily, a few days after the funeral the log house was burned to ashes. Not even the groceries or ammunition could be saved when Uncle Harris and the Kid came dashing to the scene from the land they were busily clearing.

This was the finish for Uncle Harris. He moved to Hawaii, where he ended his days.

But first he had to have a drinking bout. As he was sobering up he met The Kid again and tried desperately to persude him to give up the riding job he had held for a number of years and go east with him.

The Kid refused. The Mexican Tom played his trump card. He offered the boy a young saddle horse that the Kid couldn't resist and they were in business together.

Under Tom's instruction he broke some horses, did some fencing and erected a log barn. Tom now planned to go into the freighting business, but first he had to have a wagon. He made a trip to Vancouver for this purpose and returned in due course with not only the wagon and some harness, but a present for the Kid — a Victor gramophone with a few records.

By this time the wild cattle had worked their way south and now made their headquarters on the Bull Swamp. One huge bull lorded it over all the others. Every morning and evening he ascended his favorite hill and bawled, pawing the ground, in open challenge to anything afoot.

One night Tom came home to a strange duet — a rendition of the Blue Danube Waltz, by the gramophone, with the bawling accompaniment of the big bull. Glancing in the animal's direction, Tom remarked: "There's old Blue Danube!" That was how the old swamp got the name it bears today. When the Kid finally killed the bull he found he had been twice shot before, once through the horn and once in the left leg.

The Kid was breaking horses in his spare time and he had a young team of matched colts partially broken to the wagon. Mexican Tom, no longer young, wanted to drive them to Masset alone.

For good reasons, the Kid opposed the idea. Not only was Tom now badly crippled with rheumatism, but his young partner knew he would go on a drunk when he reached Masset.

But the wilful man went anyway, and an accident caused by his drinking and recklessness brought the closing chapter of his colorful career. On the way to the hospital at Prince Rupert, he scrawled on a piece of paper: "Everything I have goes to the Kid."

When there was some question concerning the validity of the paper, the judge at Prince Rupert settled it by remarking it was one of the best wills he had seen!

That year the Kid unknowingly laid the foundation for his later service in the Anglican Church by helping to build the first one in New Masset in 1912. It was constructed of logs and a split shake roof. The altar and railings were fashioned by the talented Haida Indians, of Yellow Cedar — a beautiful wood that improves with age and polish. Little did the Kid realize as he worked that some day his ordained son, the Rev. Bob Purdy would preach in this church he helped to build . . . or that he would some day return as an ordained priest to conduct a service in the old but still lovely church.

The Kid only stayed another year on the Island. Life on the Charlottes was never the same after his father died and old Mexican Tom's passing severed the last link. The old cattle man who taught him so much of the outdoors had also put most of the meaning into his life there. Thus in 1913 he took his leave of the Charlottes.

The Gellatly name is linked with British Columbia's pioneer days, and particularly with those of the Okanagan. Gellatly boat-landing, half way down the west side of Okanagan Lake, was named for D. E. Gellatly, who did more to encourage and foster the vegetable-growing industry than any man who ever lived in the Valley.

The Gellatly Pioneers

By DOROTHY HEWLETT GELLATLY

In 1883 Mr. and Mrs. Gellatly (the former Eliza Ure), both born in Scotland, he at Montrose and she at Kippen, emigrated with their infant son, David, to settle in the bushland of northern Ontario. As the young mother was expecting her second child, a log cabin was hurriedly put up, and here in a half - roofed cabin with a dirt floor, John Ure Gellatly was born Dec. 23, 1883.

The country was bleak, and the young father was no more satisfied with this new country than was the young mother, and both felt they wouldn't remain long in Ontario.

Growing more and more dissatisfied, Mr. Gellatly heard the call of the west, and in 1893 the family, (there were four daughter's by this time), travelled to Vernon, where the head of the house found work carpentering. Two years later, in 1895, he leased the land at Shorts Point, pre-empted earlier by Thomas Doleman Shorts, who put the first steamboat on Okanagan Lake. Shorts Point, later to be renamed Fintry, is 10 miles south of Vernon on the west side of Okanagan Lake.

Here the family started farming in earnest, and here the first carload of tomatoes ever to leave the Okanagan was grown — destined for the mining towns of Kootenay, then in their heyday. After the car was loaded and ready to go, the CPR made the embarrassing discovery that no freight rate covering carload shipments out of the Okanagan, existed.

A hurried and frantic exchange of telegrams between the local agent and CPR headquarters finally resulted in the settlement of a rate not particularly satisfactory to the producer; a rate based on the difference between the price of potatoes in the Okanagan and the price per ton at the car's destination — Nelson.

So that first car-load eventually reached its market, and the Gellatly's made plans for still bigger potato-crops in the following years, when perhaps they'd own their own land.

But alas, Shorts Point was not for sale they were soon to learn. Nothing daunted, Mr. Gellatly began looking elsewhere, finding what he wanted some 30 miles down the lake — at Powers Flat — soon to become Gellatly.

In 1900 they moved, father, and sons David and John, driving their stock down the old Fur Brigade Trail, explored by the Astorians in 1811, and used by both the North West and Hudson's Bay fur companies. It was used again by the gold-seekers of 1858, and in the 1860s became a second route to Cariboo.

Still again, in 1898, the Gellatly's saw men toiling north over it, heading for the Klondike gold rush. And now it knew again the hooves of horses and oxen, going south, as had the fur-trains from Fort Kamloops and north, bound for Fort Okanagan, 40 years and more before.

Meanwhile mother, with the girls and younger boys, sailed to their new home aboard the CPR stern-wheeler Aberdeen, and reaching their destination, found one log cabin and a stable, abandoned by Billy Powers, for whom Powers Creek is named, and who'd pre-empted the flat in 1889. Here he and C. D. Simms, who that same year pre-empted the beach-land know today as Westbank, had built their cabin. They did not remain long in residence, however, for the Indians, claiming the flat as their special property, harassed them to the extent that both abandoned their claims, Billy in 1890.

Later that same year, G. H. Rashdale, who with G. R. Lawes, had built the Enderby grist mill, decided that Powers Flat was too good a thing to pass up, and he in turn pre-empted it; but two years later mortgaged it to Rev. George Hill, British Columbia's first bishop. (The Islander) for Sept. 6, 1970, carried a photo of the monument raised to the memory of Bishop George Hill in Ross Bay Cemetery).

Later records concerning Gellatly Flat read that on June 1, 1900: 'Conveyance in Fee; the Anglican Synod to David Erskine Gellatly.' Known when first surveyed as Lot 15, Kamloops District, it was later recorded as Lot 897, Osoyoos Land District.

So, in that summer of 1900, the Gellatly's arrived to take possession of their very own property. But one log cabin was far from adequate for a growing family or four sons and five daughters. That however, was a problem not too difficult to remedy, for both flat and the surrounding benches were heavily timbered, and it didn't take long to put up another cabin or two. Besides which, at least a part of the land must be cleared without delay for a crop of sorts the following year.

At clearing father and sons worked hard, their only tools being crosscut saws, axes and stumping powder. Later, pick and shovel and a horse-drawn scraper for levelling would be used to make the land ready for the plow.

By 1903 the first apple trees were set out, while small fruits and vegetables had been planted as soon as land was ready. Though Gellatly Flat had first water rights on Powers Creek, irrigation problems arose, for now the neighboring settlement of Westbank was growing, and needed water, too. So, as always where water is a vital issue, trouble that occasionally erupted into almost armed conflict, flared up among those first — and even the-not-so-first settlers in the water-hungry Okanagan. For without water the Okanagan remains a desert. Given it, it blossoms like the rose.

In the fall of 1904 a greenhouse for starting tomato plants, measuring 20 by 40 feet, replaced a smaller one built earlier, and from then on the family began shipping car-lots of mixed vegetables, which later included fruit. The next fall, 1905, erection of what was to be — at that time — the largest greenhouse in the interior, measuring 53 by 250 feet, began, the glass being shipped round the Horn from England.

By April of 1906 it was finished and ready for the seeding of thousands of tomato and other plants that would be required each season. Then, on the morning seeding was to begin, a gale arose and sticks and branches soon were being whipped from trees to sail through the air.

No one was too worried, though, as the men would be working inside, anyway. But alas, only minutes before they reached the greenhouse to start work, the whole structure collapsed with a terrific crash — a total ruin.

New glass was ordered without delay. Construction problems that had allowed such crashes to occur, were ironed out, and by the spring of 1907 the second house was ready. This time it withstood all that Nature could do. Indeed, that greenhouse remained standing until it was torn down long after Mr. Gellatly's death in 1922.

From 1907 on, production at Gellatly increased annually, and it was not long before Mr. Gellatly earned that well-merited title, Tomato King of the Okanagan. Onions were another crop, many tons being harvested and shipped each season. Sodi Boucherie Flat, across Westbank Bay, became part of the Gellatly holdings and the family venture, with its own box-factory and packinghouse, was a large one.

Early each spring the greenhouse was made ready for seeding, after which the plants were brought to the stage for setting out as soon as weather allowed. This setting-out was done with the aid of a horse-drawn machine equipped with seats for two men close to the ground, and with a constant supply of plants ready at hand.

Planting two rows at a time, the machine would punch a hole in the soft dirt, add a squirt of water to each, after which it was the men's turn to drop a plant in each hole, upon which the machine covered the roots as it moved forward to repeat the process across the field and back throughout the day.

Seasonal employment and the annual payroll was high, with scores of hands busy from spring to late fall with various farm operations. A few of the men had their own quarters, especially the married ones, while the Gellatly girls catered for the rest, as well as milking, picking and packing fruit in season.

With the fruit-growing industry still in its infancy, there were no mechanical graders in the Okanagan in those days. Therefore, fruit had to be sorted by hand for size, quality and color — not exactly a speedy operation, but definitely an exacting one.

Later, with the installation of graders in most packinghouses, peaches, pears, apples and even tomatoes, were frequently wrapped, and the skill of a packer as she deftly wrapped and packed with one quick motion of the wrist, was fascinating to watch. It was a skill that the amateur, begging for a chance to try, soon gave up in despair. A good packer, invariably a piece-worker, could wrap and pack hundreds of cases of peaches, or up to 150 and 200 or more boxes of apples in a day.

Occasional attacks of "packers' wrist," especially among beginners, was an occupational hazard, never entirely overcome unless one learned the correct and relaxed use of the wrist.

Changed methods of packing have practically eliminated the art of fruit-wrapping; but in its day this was a challenging and well-paid part of packinghouse work. The Gellatly girls were among the first to learn the skill of wrapping fruit; but in early days they had to choose for size, color and quality at the same time.

In 1915, D. E. Gellatly and Sons opened a wholesale distributing house, box-factory, extensive stables centre for disposing of much of their own as well as the produce of others. For three years the eldest son, David, was in charge.

In 1919 a disastrous fire destroyed the Gellatly wharf, packing-house, bod-factory, extensive stables and all equipment; a staggering blow, as the fire-insurance policy,

This heralded the beginning of the end, for broken in health, as well as financially crippled, it was impossible for Mr. Gellatly to recoup his losses. In 1922 he entered Vernon General Hospital for surgery from which he did not recover, dying on March 7 at age 65. Mrs. Gellatly lived to the ripe old age of 86.

The entire family helped to build the Gellatly "empire," daughters as well as sons, and Mrs. Gellatly was her husband's very real helpmate.

As a daughter-in-law, the wife of her eldest son, my memories of her are of one of the finest women I've been privileged to know. Born in Stirlingshire, of Covenantor stock, she had all of the traditional Scottish regard for higher education — regard doomed to disappointment for her sons, who, growing up where educational facilities were almost non-existent, and with a self-made father, they got what education they could, the hard way.

They spent the greater part of their formative years in clearing the land and growing the crops for which the family became so well known.

It was son David who, as early as 1905, showed a bent for a new line, that of nut-growing, and in contact with those in and out of government with similar interests, he soon began specializing in selecting suitable varieties of nuts to be grown in southern British Columbia and the milder parts of Canada.

Never a publicity-seeker, David nevertheless became well known as one of the founders of nut culture in British Columbia. Having already established his own Rosefield Nursery at Gellatly, the addition of nut trees to his stock naturally followed. He died in 1953, leaving his wife, the former Dorothy Hewlett, author of A Bit of Okanagan History, and other stories, who still lives in Westbank; one daughter, Audrey, Mrs. J. P. Weinard, Kamloops, and two grandchildren.

David's brother, John, on returning in the early 1920s from Illinois, where he'd spent several years, soon showed his interest in nut-growing, and from then until his death in 1969, was keenly interested in developing varieties suitable for even colder parts of Canada.

He served as a director of the Northern Nut-Growers' Association, and was recognized throughout nut-growing circles in the United States and abroad, as well as in Canada. While living in Illinois, he married an Australian girl, Sarah Smythe, and they had one son, Allan. But both wife and son predeceased John, who was in his 86th year when he died.

For 23 years Gellatly had its own post office, established June 1, 1903, and closing in 1926, since which time the neighboring Westbank post office has served both communities. Gellatly post office had its headquarters in one room of the mansion Mr. Gellatly built in 1908 as a surprise for his wife on her return from a trip to her homeland.

And a surprise it most certainly was, by far surpassing the cosy home she'd dreamed of for so long. One of the most modern for its time in the Okanagan, it stood there, all three storeys, dazzling in its coat of white paint — awaiting the arrival of its rightful chatelaine as the steamer docked at Gellatly wharf, bringing her on the last lap of her voyage from Scotland.

Little wonder if it appeared a veritable castle to Mrs. Gellatly, so far removed was it from the humble log cabins comprising her homes through pioneer days. And her wonder grew as her husband proudly led her through the spacious downstairs rooms with their tall bay windows and fireplaces, and up the broad front stairway to the bedrooms on the second floor. And here, wonder of wonders, Mrs. Gellatly found them to be equipped with hot and cold running water — and steam heat here, and on the third floor too, as well as downstairs; for Mr. Gellatly had had the foresight to utilize the heating equipment that served the greenhouse, for the new home. The old home is gone now, demolished, thus meeting the same fate as many another historical landmark.

A Gellatly still lives on the old place, William, the third son, taking over John's nursery at the latter's death.

An echo of steamboating days came to my ears recently when I learned that William Leslie, a dining-steward on, first the Aberdeen and then the Okanagan, frequently helped local LCL shipments at Gellatly, partly to pass the time, and partly to help out. Many of the flowers that graced the dining saloons of those stern-wheelers were grown in the Gellatly greenhouse or gardens, and in those days there was no union to prevent anyone giving a helping hand.

Now in 1905, Will Leslie was to be a bridegroom, his bride a Miss L. Munn, of Enderby, and by special request the wedding bouquet was to come from the Gellatly greenhouse. Years later, the Leslie's elder daughter, Jean, became the bride of William Gellatly, and they are the only Gellatly's now living on Gellatly Flat.

Another son, Arthur, and his wife, lives at Okanagan Centre, and the youngest daughter, Mrs. Rae Walde, is at New Westminster. There are also third and fourth generation descendents of the Scottish pioneers, some in the Okanagan and others at coastal points and elsewhere.

The flat is still known as Gellatly. There are other homes roundabout, though the Gellatly home is gone, and David's home on Gellatly Point, aptly named Pilot House, has been moved. But their land at the lake is now known as Scottish Cove, a resort where visitors come, season after season, to enjoy one of the most beautiful spots in the Okanagan.

Gellatly Road, named for the family, circles to touch Highway 97 both east and west of Westbank, so the name Gellatly is still remembered — just as oldtimers still remember when the stately stern-wheelers, Aberdeen, Okanagan and Sicamouse made Gellatly a port of call on both north and southbound trips daily.

Gold Miners Sought Route to Omineca

There is something of magic in the words "gold rush." And in the late days of June, the month before British Columbia's entry into Confederation, The Daily British Colonist was using the term with enthusiasm and applying it to the new discoveries in the Omineca.

At the same time the newspaper warned editorially that communications being what they were, the government should bend every effort to find and develop the best possible overland route to the diggings to avoid the disastrous price inflation that had been experienced earlier elsewhere.

Adding to travel worries that summer were the flood conditions in many parts of the province, meager reports of which were commencing to filter in to Victoria.

The steamer would go on to Tatlah and Stewart Rivers, Cottonwood and Fort George canyons with freight and impatient miners.

The Colonist considered worth investigating the report by the Indian of a short route from Stewart Lake to Germansen Creek — 80 miles of reasonably easy travel requiring no more than three days.

Other miners, as many as 300, had passed Babine Lake with two-months' provisions, spurred by reports that on one claim they were taking "six ounces a day to the hand," only six miles above the old camp of 1870.

Exiting days, indeed.

"Great energy is being displayed in establishing easy communications between Quesnelmouth and Omineca," said The Colonist, "and those operating upon the route claim very great advantages for it over any other ... (and) the great bulk of supplies will go that way.

"It is also certain that those

Kosinski Writes Chilling Modern Parable

Startling Novel Carries Ominous Overtones

Reviewed by E. D. WARD-HARRIS

From time to time there appears a writer of unusual distinction whose imaginative powers, disciplined to the tradition of high art, holds up a mirror to humanity. Dean Swift performed this function, and, to a lesser degree, so did Samuel Butler. More recent literary seers included Aldous Huxley, George Orwell and, of course, Kafka.

BEING THERE, by by Jerzy Kosinski; Longman Canada; 142 pages; $5.75.

Today, we have Jerzy Kosinski, undoubtedly the most gifted figure to appear on the literary scene in many years. Following his Kafkaesque Steps, and his immensely impressive The Painted Bird (Arthur Miller called it "a powerful blow on the mind") he now offers us Being There.

Being There is a startling novel, many-layered and carrying ominous overtones, typified by the name of its hero, or anti-hero — Chance, who, clearly, could be the man of tomorrow.

Chance's whole life has been spent in two solitary pursuits: tending a garden and watching television effortlessly and relentlessly. The result is chilling in the extreme.

Chance is a "man without qualities," a self-conditioned human being. His identity is completely circumstantial; it depends entirely on what he has seen of the world on the television screen.

Compelled to leave his garden and enter the modern world Chance meets — through circumstance — statesmen, financiers and diplomats. His answers about the state of the world are regarded as shrewdly simplified, uncluttered by historical complications.

Inflation is rampant and there are unmistakable signs of another 1929 situation. An extremely anxious President of the United States asks Chance for his views. Chance, who hasn't understood a word of the previous conversation between the president and the nation's leading financier, is nonplussed. He stares at the carpet, then answers:

"In a garden," he said, "growth has its season. There are spring and summer, but there are also fall and winter. And then spring and summer again. As long as the roots are not severed, all is well and all will be well."

The President is impressed by "the most refreshing and optimistic statement I've heard in a very, very long time." He says he envies Chance his good solid sense — "just what we lack on Capitol Hill."

That night, the President quotes Chance in a nationally televised speech. Instantly famous, he is interviewed on TV (deputising for the nation's absent vice-president), sought out by a publisher and the press, and lionized by leading diplomats at the United Nations and by Washington society.

He handles himself impressively, adapting to each situation by the use of things remembered from incessant TV viewing. His questioners, already convinced of his wisdom, place their own interpretations on his laconic replies, and his silences, and are fully satisfied.

Chance (the technocrat of the future?) is all things to all men. To the older people he has the touch of natural goodness to which men respond; to the young, he is a natural leader — unattached, unperturbed, turned out.

Kosinski has written a modern parable, as chilling as it is brilliant. The entire action takes place over a period of four days. During this brief time, Chance, exclusively TV educated and conditioned, steps from obscurity to international fame.

To those unfamiliar with this author, a brief biographical note may be of interest. Jerzy Kosinski was born in Poland in 1933. At the age of 22 he became an associate professor at the Polish Academy of Sciences in Warsaw. Two years later he emigrated to the United States, where he gained an MA degree in both history and political science.

In 1967 he was awarded the Guggenheim Fellowship for creative writing in fiction, and soon after became a Fellow of the Centre for Advanced Studies at Wesleyan University. During 1969-70 he taught English prose at Princeton University, and he is now professor of dramatic prose and criticism at Yale University.

Although his books have been translated into every major language, Kosinski writes only in English — shades of Conrad!

If you have not already done so, I urge you to become acquainted with Kosinski's work. His brilliant mind, astringent style and impressive restraint are a welcome and refreshing counter-balance to the exhibitionism and wanton display which now plague what passes for our culture.

KANE CAPTURES LIFE-STYLE OF CONTINENT'S FIRST CITIZEN

Reviewed by TED BURGOYNE

To most Canadians, even those with just a vague interest in art, the name Paul Kane is known as a 19th century painter of Indians. His work frequently reproduced, the artist seldom remembered.

Finally, 100 years after his death, Kane gets the treatment his work deserves. University of Toronto Press, in co-operation with University of Texas has published Paul Kane's Frontier, a giant of a volume, containing a definitive study of Kane's life by Canadian art historian J. Russell Harper, incorporating Kane's own highly successful book of years ago: Wanderings of an Artist Among the Indians of North America, displaying 48 color plates and 204 black and white Kane illustrations.

Additionally, Harper's catalogue raisonne, preceding the regular index, is of immense value in identifying hundreds of items by Kane in various collections, most of which have been until now, completely unknown by the public.

Harper began work on this project in 1967, and necessarily, many people across North America were involved in some stage of the research.

In view of Kane's preoccupation with B.C. during his travels, and in particular, Vancouver Island, it is interesting to note that among his acknowledgements in the preface, Harper gives thanks to Victoria's Willard Ireland and Mrs. Dorothy Blakey Smith of the provincial archives.

With publication of this book another interesting note is that the National Art Gallery, in conjunction with the Amon Carter Museum of Western Art of Fort Worth, Texas, has mounted the first show of Kane's work that combines his paintings, sketches and drawings. It shows in Calgary this summer; Edmonton in the winter; Toronto and Ottawa next year. There is no mention of a showing in Victoria, which is a pity.

Nearly 100 sketches survive from the three months during which Kane worked along the southern tip of Vancouver Island, the mainland coasts of both B.C. and Washington.

Harper states "these are of the greatest ethnological and historical interest, and some are among his finest artistic productions."

Harper goes on to say of his B.C. work: "Their subject matter has no parallel in the work of any other 19th century artist in the same region. Kane was attracted by the number and variety of tribes and no better place than Fort Victoria existed for sketching them."

Kane's Indian phase is what really sets him apart from other artists of his time. Produced as a result of travelling through the west from 1845 through 1848, the work is the entire basis for his reputation. Perhaps no one has so faithfully captured the life-style of this continent's first citizens.

In his early life there was nothing to indicate Kane was to become a first class outdoorsman: Brought to York from Ireland at age nine, he lived with his father who ran a wine and spirits shop at Yonge and Adelaide Streets of what is now the giant Toronto.

He went to school just long enough to learn to spell phonetically, as is shown many times in his Wanderings, and on his work, then became a decorator of furniture.

What brought young Kane from this stage to a life where he survived every ordeal on the trail, every bitter and harsh winter, death-defying rapids, to say nothing of more-often-than-not hostile Indians, is what makes Paul Kane's Frontier a valuable addition to the world of Canadiana.

If the price tag of $27.50 seems harsh, it is only because it is a costly publication. It is a shame because this is a Canadian history that should be within reach of all, and not just at the public library.

Of particular interest to Islanders will be Kane's notes and sketches while at Fort Victoria, the Indian village on the east side of Esquimalt harbor, his visit to the Cowichans and north to the land of the Nootkas.

His sketches of battles, as well as every-day routine of both brave squaw and medicine man are fascinating. No less fascinating is his work depicting an enraged and wounded buffalo (which he killed after finishing the sketch). No drawing room artist, this Kane.

In 1847 Kane painted Mount St. Helen, 50 miles northeast of what is now Portland, Ore. as it erupted from vents in the side and historians bear this out when they state that St. Helen did indeed erupt between 1841 and 1847!

A fascinating contribution to Canadian literature.

Books and Authors

Know Your Birds

Identifying birds is always fun and two books that will help are SPOTTING BIRDS by Jaroslav Spirhanzl Duris and Edmund Burke, Illustrated by Jan Sokvjev; (Hamlyn; 256 pages; $1.95) and THE DUCKS, GEESE and SWANS OF NORTH AMERICA, by F. H. Kortright; (McLeod; 476 pages; $9.50).

Spotting birds is a typical pocket guide for bird watchers, but it is basically a European book, although some of the birds described and pictured in full-page color illustrations are also found in this country. An interesting book, but not necessarily an authoritative guide for this country.

DUCKS, GEESE and SWANS is just about as authoritative on the subject as they come and should have a place in the library of every naturalist and bird hunter. It is well illustrated with maps, black and white sketches showing the birds in various positions and with full-page color plates showing adults, females, wings, even the downy young of various species.

There is no glamor-writing in this book, rather it is in text book style, but it contains pretty well all the answers.

ELEPHANT BANGS TRAIN, by William Kotzwinkle (Pantheon; 148 pages; $5.95) is a collection of short stories by a new young writer whose prose bubbles with freshness. Some stories contain a mixture of hilarity and terror; some are coated in magical madness; and some have the air of an hallucination.

Kotzwinkle is irreverent, zany, highly individualistic and richly talented. One either admires or detests his style, but it is difficult to remain indifferent to it.

Father of Conservation

Wild Goose Jack, with a more serious title as Jack Miner, His Life and Religion is the name of a book which just came from the press and is in the book stores, and on the 18,000 wire book racks in Canada waiting to be purchased and read by the reading public who have followed the life and career of the late Jack Miner, the Canadian naturalist.

From the years 1910 to 1930 Jack Miner toured the continent on lecture tours preaching Conservation of not only wild life but of our God-given natural resources. He has often been referred to as "the father of the Conservation movement on this Continent."

As old age began to creep on he was persuaded by his friends to write his life story, his autobiography which included the facts contained in his public lectures. The last ten years of his life were spent in putting into manuscript form his life story which is known as his autobiography.

This manuscript lay in a safe for more than 25 years and has now been put into book form by The Simon and Schuster publishers of paper back books.

One request by Jack Miner was that it be made available at a price every school child could afford, so by producing a large edition this paper back edition retails at $1.25.

One and all will remember that last fall, 1970, when Jack Miner had been dead 26 years, researchers found that he was the first individual to call on the governors and the prime ministers of states and provinces which border the Great Lakes to plan on taking action against the Great Lakes becoming polluted. This was in 1927, some 44 years ago, when he said (to use his own words): "Let's not get together to talk laws but let us get together to do something."

Playland of the Pacific

The beginning of Newcastle Island as a recreational centre was in 1931, when Canadian Pacific Railways purchased the entire island from Canadian Collieries Coal Company. Coal mining operations of the island had virtually ceased some 30 years before, and the sandstone quarry that had been worked for 80 years was also about to close for the final time.

In the same year that they purchased the property, the CPR built the dance pavilion, bath houses, dining tables, a caretaker's home, and included all the modern conveniences of electric lights, running water, and flush toilets. A contract was let that year for a $50,000 dock to be constructed at Echo Bay, where the existing boating facilities are located.

This was destined to become the playland of the west. A tea garden was laid out under the shady trees in front of the pavilion. A vessel, the Charmer, was tied up to the dock to be used as a floating hotel. From 1931 until the commencement of the Second World War, Newcastle Island was used constantly for recreational purposes, with CPR ferries making regular runs from Vancouver. Annual company picnics were held here, and crowds of 5,000 revellers were not unusual.

My friend, Mr. Cass, who at the time was working on the ferry Atrevida that ran back and forth from Nanaimo, recalled one busy day when five large CPR vessels had brought loads of funseekers to the island on the same day. The pavilion was the scene of regular Saturday night dances. Many people will remember the Princess Victoria, commonly referred to as the Vic, which took the place of the Charmer as floating hotel and remained there during the summers for seven years.

With the coming of the war, ships were no longer available for such frivolities. The CPR discontinued its ferry services to the island, and by 1942, there was not even any ferry running from Nanaimo. Newcastle Island had seen the end of an era.

In 1955, the city of Nanaimo purchased the island from CPR for $150,000, but, not being able to afford the maintenance of the facilities, donated the property to the provincial government five years later.

Today, most of the buildings remain. The pavilion is no longer used for dances, but one end is operated as a concession in the busy months. The caretaker's log cabin is occupied briefly in the summer. The wading pool, toilets and change houses continue to be of use, but the crowds are never the same.

The busiest day of the season these years is in late May on Coal Tyee Day, when the honor of the Indian who reported coal to the white man is celebrated. The merrymaking on this day includes Indian dances on the green, war canoe races across the harbor, and features without fail a salmon barbecue with the fresh fish roasted over an open pit in the traditional fashion by Nanaimo Indians.

Flocks of townspeople attend the celebrations on Coal Tyee Day, and the Canadian Navy usually provides two or three vessels that ply in a continuous stream to transport people over to the island in somewhat of the same manner as must have been those many years ago.

Our fig newtons having long since been devoured, and not being tempted by an overdry pack of honey grahams, we left the rest of our figurings to another day and returned across the narrow Exit Channel to our home berth. The story of Peter the Kanaka would have to wait to another day, along with the miners, the quarry workers, and the Japanese, who all have their part in the history of this most interesting island.

Gold Miners Sought Route to Omineca

resorting to the new Eldorado from the interior and from the neighboring American territory have for the most part adopted the route. But it is equally understandable that a large proportion of those who made Victoria the starting point have preferred the coast or Skeena route."

Naturally, The Colonist would recommend this choice.

The newspaper published a letter claiming discovery of a new route whereby parties could travel from the forks of the Skeena to Takiah Lake, thereby saving a very considerable distance.

"We wish to urge upon the Executivie," wrote David W. Higgins in The Colonist, "the important duty of affording every reasonable facility for men and supplies getting in . . .

"Under these circumstances (referring to the "rush") the great duty of the hour is a strenuous effort to increase the capacity to supply that distant market . . . We all know from bitter experience the ill results of a rush even to the richest diggings without reasonable means of supply. If the masses can only obtain food at famine prices the majority will turn away from the richest pay dirt ever struck and curse the country."

British Columbia, Higgins reminded his readers who no doubt remembered very well, had already passed through one crisis of starvation at the mines and piratical prices.

"We cannot yet afford to go through another," he warned.

The directions were vague. "Near Mount Tzouhalem. A trail through the woods, opposite a wire gate—not far off the road, about a quarter of a mile." The loggers had found her, and Shirley heard about it.

OUR LADY IN THE WOODS

By P. G. RODD

"Let's go on Sunday," Shirley suggested, "and take our lunch. It shouldn't be far, according to the loggers. There is a large flat rock, balanced on another rock and nearby a cave. And in this cave is this statue."

Sunday came — a warm day in March, with the wild flowers starting to bloom, a few lilies, shooting stars, buttercups, wild mustard and the fresh green grass, moss and small new leaves on all the shrubs.

We found the start of the trail without any difficulty. Stopping on the top of a hill along the road, and "across from the wire gate." The trail, narrow and like a deer track, led into the unlogged part of the woods.

The three boys went first — they were the scouts, they said, and covered three times the distance of the four adults. The moss was thick and soft on our feet and the trail well-trodden, over the rocky bank, through the salal until we found the logging road.

From here was devastation, branchs everywhere, scraped rocks denuded of moss and flowers, and fallen tree trunks. A few shrubs were starting into growth again, but most had been broken down in the logging.

The right went further into the woods so that way we went, and the ground became steeper, but we clambered up over the rocks and came to the edge of a sheer cliff where we could look across Sansum Narrows to Cape Keppel and the Saanich Peninula, far below.

"It shouldn't be this far," said Shirley, "Only a quarter of a mile and an easy trail, the loggers said."

George thought we should go on, and the three boys had gone, anyway, so the two men continued up the rocks. Shirley and I found another way back, on a different level, and soon the boys, who had been to the top of the hill, joined us.

"There is nothing up there," they said, "where is the cave?"

"Here is the cave!" she said, and they were there, sliding and scrambling down the steep, rocky bluff.

They had explored it thoroughly by the time I joined them, and had not found a statue, only some old bones.

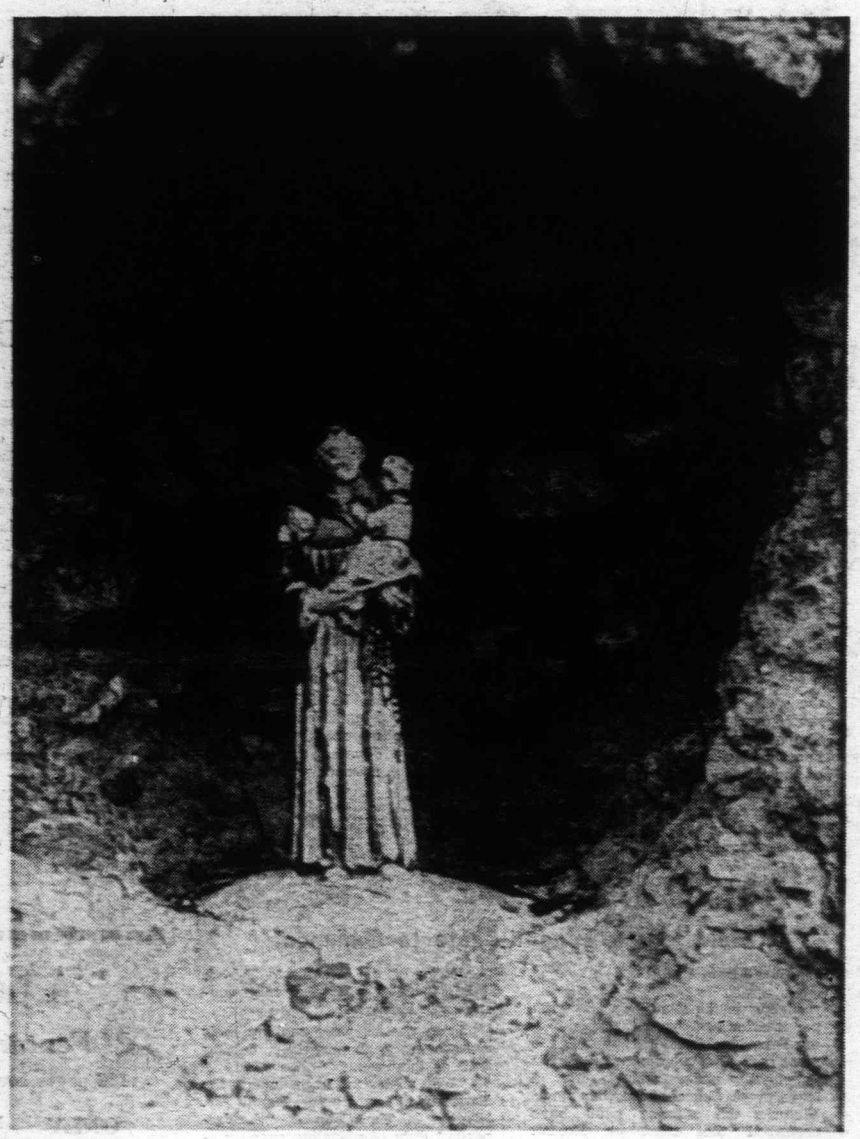

"Prehistoric," said Brian, who put them in a plastic bag to take home.

The cave was under a large rock, and had been inhabited at some time, perhaps by deer, perhaps by Indians, perhaps by a hermit or some hippies.

It was not a real cave into the mountain, but just a shelter under the base of two huge boulders.

"Where is the statue?" asked Ron.

"Look around," said Shirley, indicating to me with a small movement of her head. I looked in that direction and there, in a hollow in the face of a large rock, stood the statue, cemented at the base and smiling serenely into the woods.

MYSTERY STATUE IN THE CAVE

She was about 14 inches high, weathered, but with most of the glaze colors still visible. She stood holding the Child, most incongruous amid the rocks, the devastation that loggers leave, and the solitude. I wished I could have seen it before the trees had gone, in the beauty of an untouched forest.

"Where is it?" asked John, still looking around at the other rocks that made the cave.

"Come over here," called Shirley and the three boys came running.

"See," said Shirley, "There is the big flat rock, on top of the other, and it is not very far from there, you know."

"Who put her there?"

"Why?" asked the youngest.

"She is not really in a cave," said Brian, "Did they cut out the place?"

"I think a round rock might have fallen out and made the niche.

"It is a conglomerate boulder."

The two men came then and we all stood and wondered: "Why?"

We returned down a short trail, that crossed the logging road, and was the continuation of the trial by which we had entered.

I hope she stands there still — Our Lady in the Woods.

'Heartwarming' Response

Port Alberni Helps Hostel Opening

PORT ALBERNI — An appeal to Port Alberni residents for food and other items to enable the two newly opened opened local hostels to provide breakfast for transient youth brought an instantaneous and overwhelming response, Bill Maylone, one of the hostel counsellors has said.

"First of all there was the dance we held, when St. Alban's Hall was donated for free, and the musicians would take only $5 each for their services," Maylone said. "We cleared $190 which gave us some cash for immediate needs."

"Then the local radio station broadcast an announcement that we needed breakfast foods to fulfill our commitment to provide breakfast for the hostellers and the response was heartwarming."

Merchants and individuals responded and more than 25 dozen eggs, 30 loaves of bread, bacon, cereal, powdered milk, coffee, jam and peanut butter rolled in. There were also cash donations and last week the Lions Club saved the day with a cheque for $100. A considerable amount of clothing has also been made available.

Now the big problem is that although the hostel was authorized by the federal government, no funds for the project have yet been received.

Co-ordinator Pat Deakin, has been working on the scheme for nearly two months and his counsellors for a month, but salaries have not yet been paid.

"But the community response has been wonderful," Maylone said. "A group of ladies from the census bureau heard of our plight, and they have pledged themselves to come out and help with the breakfasts.

"And the kids are great too. Where they can't pay our small fee, there's been no trouble in getting them to grab a broom or a toilet brush and work out their debt".

"I think a lot of people in town are finding out they're not all drug-dropping hippie types as many people feared. Most are good kids and willing to work for what they can't otherwise afford."

Fly Test Allowed at Spawning

NANAIMO — As a result of requests by the Nanaimo Fish and Game Club, the fisheries department and forestry will allow fly fishing for trout on the Nanaimo River during angling closures, which are normally imposed to protect spawning salmon.

The move is an experiment which will be closely monitored by department officials and assessed at the close of the season.

Spawning streams are usually closed to fishing at certain times to prevent the jigging or snagging of salmon.

The fish and game club made their proposal on the grounds that in fly fishing with trout tackle, this does not occur.

In a letter to the Nanaimo club, W. R. Hourston, director of fisheries, Pacific region, said that after review of the request by local officers, it was decided to put the club's proposal, into effect during this fall's closure.

Beauty at Stake

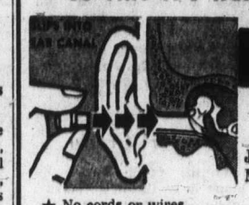

NANAIMO — The Nanaimo Chamber of Commerce has announced that Nanaimo's nominating committee has been set up and will receive names to compete for the Park and Tilford trophy, awarded annually to the B.C. business contributing most to the beautification of the province.

Closing date is July 31 and there is no restriction on the size or type of business eligible for nomination.

Businesses named in the past range from motels, service stations and small stores to shopping centres, joint community and business project, large industries and industrial parks.

Cowichan 93.4 Per Cent in Favor

Solid 'Yes' Polled In Hospital Test

DUNCAN — People in the Cowichan Valley Regional District Saturday voted overwhelmingly in favor of a $1,600,000 hospital money by-law which will give the area a 100-bed extended care unit and allow renovations at the Chemainus General Hospital.

The 93.4 per cent vote in favor was described as an unprecedented success.

About 5,000 ratepayers, or 30 per cent of the 16,500 eligible, cast their vote with 4,542 in favor and 316 against.

Cowichan Valley Regional District board chairman Bruce Devitt said "a lot of people worked hard for it and they should be commended on their efforts. I think the most important thing was that people of the regional district put aside their differences and some of the parochialisms and worked together as a team to get something this area really needs."

Devitt said the vote was a good illustration of what a community can do if it does work together. "I hope it is the beginning of more co-operation in other endeavors throughout the region."

Duncan Ald. and member of the Cowichan District Hospital Board, Jay Powley said "the vote showed that the welfare of the senior citizens is uppermost in the minds of people."

North Cowichan Ald. and member of the regional hospital advisory board Donald Morton said he was delighted.

"It is a complete vindication of the regional district board's support of all hospitals and it is evidence that the entire region can pull together if they are sufficiently anxious about facilities such as this. The tremendous percentage (93.4 per cent) in favor shows that the people want us to get the project finished as soon as possible," he said.

Morton added that tenders are expected to be called this October and construction of the extended care unit should be completed by the fall of 1972.

A Sunday sports vote held at the same time was also passed by a large margin. Voters in the unorganized areas of the Cowichan Valley Regional District approved Sunday sports by 82.4 per cent.

A total of 1,039 voted for the 197 against it. The city of Duncan and the North Cowichan municipality already have Sunday sports. The only two centres within the region without it are Ladysmith and Lake Cowichan.

Graduates Recalled In Camera

PORT ALBERNI — School trustees will hold an unusual meeting Monday night in Mt. Klitsa junior high school and only those who attended Alberni district senior high school last year are invited.

Parents, teachers and the press will be excluded.

The meeting is the aftermath of last week's Alberni-Tofino School Board meeting as a number of parents and a group of students appeared before the board with two petitions. The parents were protesting their disappointment at the way in which recent Grade 12 graduation exercises were held. The students and one of their spokesmen, Father Mark Lemay, who works closely with young people in the Valley, told the trustees the high school is "sick" and "out of step with the community".

The petition was signed by 95 of the students from the high school, which has a roll of about 1,150.

School board vice-chairman and publicity director Mrs. Alice Chiko said it was decided to invite all last year's pupils from the school to attend Monday's meeting on neutral ground, "no parents, no press, no teachers, just the trustees and the students" in hopes that the young people would feel completely free to speak out and make their feelings known on a variety of subjects ranging from curriculum to restrictions on school dances and other activities.

The school board has also announced the appointment of two co-ordinators who will replace the position of vice-principal at Maquinna school.

Similar appointments were made last year at Gill school when the vice-principal there transferred, Mrs. Chiko said.

Appointed were Sharon Chisholm, of Port Alberni, as primary co-ordinator and Dave Abercrombie, originally at 8th Avenue school, as intermediate co-ordinator.

Duncan Rider Best at Trial

The competitions are being held to select the Canadian team to the Pan-American Games in Cali, Colombia July 31-Aug. 13.

Indian Dancers Spring To Top with Message

By KLAUS MUENTER

DUNCAN — The recently formed Kowutzen Dance Troupe has already danced itself to the top among native dancers in Canada.

The troupe's six members — Mr. and Mrs. Ray Peters, their 12-year-old son Rick, Mr. and Mrs. Ron george and Alfred Joe, won top place in the Kamloops Indian Pow Wow Days, June 19 and 20.

The Cowichan Indian dancers, who are sponsored by the Kowutzen Indian sports committee, not only became a big hit with the other Canadian tribes which attended the first competitive Indian dancing event, but they also sparked new interest among the others to cherish their individual cultures.

Tribes from as far away as New Brunswick participated in the Kamloops event. Mrs. Peters said: "Our main interest in attending the pow wow competition was to educate ourselves with other native cultures and to share with them what we have. Naturally, we were very happy when we were awarded the first trophy." The dance troupe from the Cowichan Band had been invited to represent the coastal Salish Indians.

Mrs. Peters said the troupe found the eastern native dress and their dancing "very much the same style among themselves, which made ours seem to be outstanding. We met many people and I think the trip to Kamloops proved to be very beneficial because we were invited to other national and international pow wows."

Recalling the happenings that eventually led to the formation of the local dance troupe, George said that he and Peters at first gave dance demonstrations to the Indian children at the Koksilah school last winter.

George said that was the beginning. "We taught them Indian dancing and songs for a nativity scene and eventually the interest also spread to non-Indian children."

Mrs. Peters explained "our efforts are also important in building better public relations with other bands, which is very necessary for the development of all our Indian way of life. This also may give our children a place in today's society and it will instigate in them the pride, which they have lost in many cases, preventing them from integrating into the industrial society."

George stressed that their dances and songs are based on the Indian opera Tzinqua (thundergod) which was performed in Duncan 20 years ago. He said the troupe already has danced for different integrated schools in Duncan and in Victoria as well as other adult groups. His wife said "non Indian children seem to accept and respond to our children with a new and respectful attitude. Presenting our dances and songs before white people will make them aware of Indian culture and more and more white people realize that we can be proud of our very specific Indian culture."

Mrs. Peters added: "When our people realize what we have that others don't have, we feel that this is the first step in preserving and practising a way of life, thus enabling our people to once more know pride and stand as individuals within a new culture."

Buggy Days Fun Planned

NANAIMO — The Downtown Merchants Association in Nanaimo will hold a special centennial promotion during confederation week, July 19 to 24. The promotion will coincide with the festivities preceeding the July 25 great international Nanaimo to Vancouver bathtub race.

Costumes will be worn by those taking part in "horse and buggy days" with prizes offered for best outfits.

Safety clinic boat shows how

Water Safety Demonstration Moves to Shawnigan Lake

SHAWNIGAN LAKE — A water safety demonstration and clinic will be held today at Mountain View and Shawnaire resorts.

The clinic is being sponsored by Labatts Breweries of B.C. The team of instructors includes Don Crompton, his wife Vicki, and Terry Burns.

The water safety clinic began Saturday at Elk Lake and will end in the Okanagan Valley Aug. 29, after 61 demonstrations at 54 different locations in the province.

Some of the demonstrations will coincide with the Safe Boating Week, July 1-7. The clinic's mobile unit consists of a van, boat, motor, trailer and canoe. Labatt's vice-president Don McFougall said: "We try to demonstrate all the basic elements of water safety including small boat handling, motor care, canoeing, mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, drownproofing and general water safety rules."

Team supervisor Crompton said "mouth-to-mouth resuscitation creates the most interest among all age goups and if we can help to save just one life then the clinic has served its purpose. There is no charge to attend our demonstrations and we'd particularly like to see parents bringing their children along. It's a small amount of time to invest but the rewards can be enormous."

He added last year more than 1,200 Canadians drowned and 241 of them were British Columbians.

Electrical Union's Shelter Offered Defence Strikers

NANAIMO — Inter-union co-operation has been promised 28 strikers of the Union of National Defence Employees. They have been offered use of trailer shelters by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers if they put up a picket line at B.C. Hydro's Wakesiah Ave. installation.

The striking defence department employees have a picket line up in front of the emergency "Diefenbunker" headquarters shelter. The picket line was established last Monday just a short distance away from the Hydro installation.

A defence employee union spokesman said Saturday that he felt "reasonably certain" that if it had been left entirely to Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. to make decisions, their contract dispute would have been settled months ago.

"It appears that the company's hands are tied as to actual settlement. They have been a very fair company and we find it hard to believe they would change their attitude to such an extreme," he added.

The members of the Nanaimo union are striking for a first contract with the crown company. A similar number began a strike against another defence department underground installation at Valcartier, Que. last Tuesday.

Other demands include 80 cents per hour over a two-year contract on a base pay of $3 il and a classification guarantee after Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. is absorbed by the defence department on Oct. 1.

Nanaimo's NDP Member of Parliament, former party leader Tommy Douglas, stated Friday that he will try to have the dispute placed before the House of Commons when it reconvenes on Monday.

Hydro Strike Heats

A union spokesman said Saturday night from Vancouver there was a "good chance" the strike of 2,000 electricians against B.C. Hydro will be stepped up in tempo by Monday.

But he offered no indication of what form the strike might take.

Work stoppages were started on a rotating basis 25 days ago by local 258 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and by last Monday the pattern was increased to include most of the 2,000 workers.

Skeleton crews have been maintained.

Picketing has also been extended in a move to keep other unionists of the job. Friday this idled more than 1,000 of Hydro's office workers.

Environment Off Limits To Branch

NANAIMO (CP) — The provincial pollution control branch has no authority to protect the environment, one of the branch's chief officers said Friday.

R. H. Ferguson told a regional district seminar that the Pollution Control Act limits the branch's jurisdiction to the discharge of liquid, gaseous and solid wastes.

"Environment consists certainly of these items but also includes esthetics, public interest, noise — almost anything you can think of," he said.

Behind Those Flowers... ...Hides Propane Lion

An Anglia Passed You?—That's a Gas

COBBLE HILL — Don't kid youself when you ever should see that old, slightly battered Anglia going up the Malahat. If you should be driving a small import, a domestic compact or even a bigger car chances are that you never could squeeze by that little 1962 English job. There is a lion hidden behind flowers that its owner, Cobble Hill mechanic Fred Anderson, painted on the body.

And if you come close enough you will be able to read "Propane-clean Air Power." And that is part of the secret why the 29-h.p. can move like a conventional sports car. About a year ago pollution-control minded Anderson converted his little Anglia from gasoline to propane and a little later he ground the engine head one-eighth of an inch and the combination produced surprising results.

It is a typical before and after story. While still on gasoline, Anderson's Anglia crept over the Malahat in third gear with only the driver. Now, with four people in it, the small car makes a level road out of the Malahat. In high hear it easily cruises at 65 miles an hour up the grade to the envy of drivers behind the wheels of gleaming and powerful automobiles.

Anderson has been driving his converted Anglia for 25,000 miles, and 10,000 of those with a slightly "shaved head." Anderson said "the planing of the head has about tripled the horsepower output and cut down the wear of the engine and I would say lengthened its life about five times." He said by increasing the horsepower he reduces the fuel consumption because the engine attains cruising speed with much less effort than before.

Fred Anderson

In reference to propane gas, Anderson stated its firing qualities are far greater than those of gasoline and it almost eliminates air pollution from car exhausts. Anderson said he had the oil changed twice in 25,000 miles and he found that the oil was cleaner than after 50 miles with gasoline.

He claimed another advantage of propane is the elimination of about 90 per cent of all breakdowns, because the propane powered car does not use a carburettor, and there is no gasoline line or fuel pump.

Instead of a carburettor, a voporizer converts the liquid propane into gas. Anderson said he never experienced any problem in getting propane anywhere. He stated to convert a car to propane costs about $350 for engines up to 150 hp and the little engine modification is about $25. Since he converted his car several other people followed his example and he received inquiries from as far as Winnipeg.

UCLA Junior Shaves World 440-Yard Record

U.S. national AAU championships in Eugene, Ore., produced a new world 440-yard 'dash' record when John Smith (above), 20-year-old UCLA sprinter, was clocked in 44.5 seconds. The listed record is 44.7 seconds. At the same meet, Marty Liquori was an easy winner in the mile event with a time of 3:56.5 and Sid Sink set a U.S. record of 8:26.4 in the 3000-metre steeplechase.

Captain Leads Adanacs To Victory Over Rocks

Coquitlam	14	9	5	193	207	18
VICTORIA	15	7	8	173	188	14
Vancouver	15	6	9	159	181	12

Next game: Tuesday—Coquitlam at Vancouver.

COQUITLAM — Captain Bill Bradley took on an unaccustomed scoring role Saturday to lead Coquitlam Adanacs to a 20-14 victory over Victoria Shamrocks in a game which broke a second-place deadlock between the clubs in the Western Lacrosse Association.

Bradley, one of the better playmakers in the league each season, collected four goals and two assists and only one Adanac — Bob Ormans — failed to pick un at least a point as Coquitlam took full advantage of Victoria defensive lapses.

SOMETHING WRONG

"When somebody like Bradley, who isn't a goalscorer by any stretch of the imagination, can score four goals, then you know something's wrong with the defence," said Bert Bertoia, Shamrock co-coach.

Adanacs took a 4-3 lead in the first period and then collected, according to Bertoia, "five softies" in the second period on the way to a 12-7 lead.

"Mental, mental, mental!" bemoaned Bertoia of the performance which saw the Rocks fall below .500 for the first time this season. "We've tried to get them to hustle back down floor but they don't turn around fast enough to pick up their checks — and it's in again."

EARLY CONTROL

Bertoia said the Shamrocks completely controlled play for the opening 10 minutes but couldn't take advantage and as a result quickly found themselves behind.

Any chance of a third-period comeback ended when the Adanacs beat goalkeeper Doug Thompson, who made 37 stops to 34 for counterpart Merv Schweitzer, three times in a 21-second span.

John Allen and Mike Gates each scored three times for Adanacs, who are now just four points behind leading New Westminster Salmonbellies. They have played one more game than Shamrocks.

Ed Kowalyk had his finest night since coming out of retirement, playing a strong defensive game as well as leading the losers with three goals and two assists.

Ken Alexander and Dennis Somner were the only other players to beat Schweitzer more than once.

Boston Red Sox, the early season leaders, stopped defending champions Baltimore Orioles cold Saturday in the featured doubleheader in American League play.

Sonny Siebert pitched a six-hitter and drove in five runs in a 10-2 second-game rout after Luis Aparacio's fourth hit of the game gave Boston a 3-2, 10-inning victory in the opener, which was televised coast-to-coast.

The Red Sox took a 2-0 lead into the ninth inning of the opener on run-scoring singles by Rico Petrocelli and Aparicio but Boog Powell slammed a two-out, two-run homer to force extra play.

Gary Peters, picking up his first win since June 4 to bring his record to 7-5, blanked Orioles in the top of the 10th and then sacrificed Billy Conigliaro into scoring position. Conigliaro scored when Aparicio's line drive fooled Frank Robinson and sailed over the right-fielder's head.

Siebert, who hit his fourth home run of the season, now has 11-4 record. He lost his shutout after having blanked the Orioles on two singles through seven innings, a bunt single and Chico Salmon's first home run ending the string in the eighth.

The double win closed the third-place Bostonians to within six games of the Orioles, who had won 21 of their previous 26 starts.

Second-place Detroit is only a game in front of the Red Sox, holding on to the runner-up spot by blanking Cleveland Indians, 1-0, behind the five-hit pitching of Joe Coleman, 7-4.

The Indians, who were shut out for the third straight time and have only scored two runs in their last 48 innings, gave up the run in the fourth inning when shortstop Eddie Leon came up with a wild-throw on what should have been an inning-ending doubleplay.

STRETCH LEAD

Oakland Athletics stretched their lead over Kansas City in the Western Division to 11 games by downing the Royals, 4-2.

Jim "Catfish" Hunter gained his 11th win, striking out 10 batters and hitting a triple and single to bring his batting average to .365.

McLAIN WHIPPED

Mel Stottlemyre got back on the winning track with a four-hitter and Bobby Murcer hit his 13th and 14th home runs as New York Yankees sent Denny McLain, 4-14, to his ninth straight loss with a 4-0 decision over Washington Senators.

McLain, who won 31 games only three years ago for the Tigers, has now lost to every team in the league this season.

In other action, Marty Pattin scattered 11 hits to even his record at 7-7 as Milwaukee Brewers blanked Minnesota Twins, 5-0, and Rich McKinney's run-scoring single with two out in the 10th inning gave Chicago White Sox a 4-3 win over California Angels.

Chicago has now won six straight, the club's longest streak since 1967.

Jerry Koosman regained his form Saturday for his first victory since May 14 but his triumph over the Montreal Expos, 2-1, didn't get New York Mets any closer to the streaking Pittsburgh Pirates atop the National League East.

Koosman allowed three bases on balls, struck out none, hit a batter and committed a wild pitch in snapping a personal four-game losing streak.

The left-hander held the Expos hitless until Ron Hunt singled with one out in the sixth inning.

LOTS OF RUNS

The Pirates stayed three and a half games ahead of the Mets with an 11-9 victory over Philadelphia as they won their 10th game in their last 13 starts.

Bill Mazeroski, Bob Robertson and Roberto Clemente drove in three runs each with Mazeroski's two-run homer, his first of the season, snapping a 4-4 tie and sparking the Pirates to their victory. Robertson hit two home runs.

Second Game.

Dock Ellis notched his 10th consecutive victory and became the National League's first 12-game winner, although he was routed in the ninth inning when the Phillies, jumped on him and Dave Giusti for five runs.

Denny Doyle singled home two runs and Tim McCarver hit a three-run homer.

TRIGGERS SPURT

Bobby Bonds triggered a three-run fourth inning with his 17th homer of the year and pitcher Ron Bryant climaxed the rally with a two-run single as San Francisco Giants defeated Houston Astros, 3-1.

Astros scored first when Jack Hiatt singled following two bases on balls in the second inning, but Bonds' homer got the Giants started against Larry Dierker, who failed for the fourth time in his quest for his 11th victory.

George Stone scattered eight hits and earned his first victory of the season in pitching the Atlanta Braves to a 1-0 victory over the slumping Cincinnati Reds.

The Braves scored the game's only run in the fifth inning and Stone made it stand up for his first victory in four decisions.

Desperation Pass Sinks East Stars

LUBBOCK, Tex. (AP) — Substitute quarterback Chuck Hixson of Southern Methodist fired a desperation 23-yard touchdown pass to Nebraska's Joe Orduna with 31 seconds remaining Saturday night to give the West a pulsating 33-28 victory in the 11th Annual Coaches All-America football game.

Hixson, who played the game in the shadow of Heisman Trophy winner Jim Plunkett of Stanford led the West 57 yards in five plays after Alabama's Scott Hunter had galloped three yards for a touchdown with 2:44 remaining to give the underdog East a 28-26 lead.

Plunkett, the No. 1 draft pick of the New England Patriots, thrilled the record crowd of 43,320 and a national television audience as he guided the West to a 19-point third quarter explosion to overcome a 21-7 deficit.

Three Share Quebec Lead

MONTREAL (CP) — Three players were tied for the lead with two under par 142s after Saturday's second round of the $16,000 Quebec Open golf championship.

Lew Taylor of Lachute, Que., Duke Doucet of Windsor, Que. and Tom Nettles of San Diego were the leaders going into final round.

Tacoma Driver Wins Feature at Western

Revenge might not have been the motive, but Ron Eaton of Tacoma got a bit of it with his main-event victory over Dave Cooper of Victoria before 3837 spectators at Western Speedway.

Eaton, beaten by Cooper last Saturday in the O'Keefe Opener main event at Langley Speedway, took the lead on the sixth lap of the 50-lap race Saturday and hung on in the first Early Late Stock Car Association of the Northwest event ever held in Canada.

Eaton was beaten twice Saturday night by Cooper. Cooper won the "A" trophy dash while Eaton finished third and Cooper was second in the fast heat in which Eaton came fourth.

In the main event, Eaton got through when Gary Kershaw, the pole-sitter, had to go around a spinout involving Mark Meers, John Harris and Mike Armstrong on the sixth lap.

For the next nine laps, Eaton was closely pursued by another Tacoma driver, Jackie Kupper, who won the fast heat. The challenge was taken over on the 15th lap by Kershaw until the 31st when a heating problem knocked the Victoria driver out of the race.

Cooper, about a quarter of a lap behind at that point, took over second place and began a slow climb, finally getting close enough to seriously challenge on the last two laps.

On the final circuit, Cooper was trailing Eaton by about a car length and made his bid on the last turn, taking the outside of the track. But the extra distance of going high was too much for Cooper to overcome and he finished three-quarters of a length behind Eaton.

NEW RECORD

Kershaw set a new super-stock record for the four-tenths of a mile circuit with a time of 17.37 seconds, averaging close to 83 m.p.h. Kershaw held the old mark of 17.58 seconds, set on May 1 of this year.

Eaton and Cooper get a chance to settle their argument today when the ELSCAN drivers wind up their Western Speedway appearance starting at 1 p.m.

McFaul's Work Saves Match

A brilliant guest appearance in goal for Victoria Royals by Iam McFaul was the only bright spot in a dull exhibition soccer match as the Royals and a Vancouver Junior All-Star team battled to a scoreless tie Saturday night.

McFaul, goalkeeper for Northern Ireland and Newcastle United of Division I in the English League who is holidaying here, first showed his class 20 minutes into the first half.

Displaying lightning-fast reflexes, McFaul snatched the ball neatly out of the air after young forward Brian Budd had broken through and fired a shot from close in.

He tipped another shot from Budd over the bar moments later and then impressed the crowd of 380 with his beautiful taking of a high ball from a free kick.

Royals' coach Brian Hughes used the match as a chance to give several of the younger players, who usually only see action in the last few minutes of a regular game, a start.

Regulars such as winger Peter Wilson, fullback Howie Anderson, link-man Peter Robarts, centre-forward Ash Valdal and George Hyne were dropped for the game.

Hughes' idea might hve been alright but as an exhibition it was a flop. The youngsters failed to click as a unit and rarely put any sting into their shots at David Burk.

Ray Telford, back in the side after playing for Canada, was the only Victoria player to impress but for the crowd the match was a bitter disappointment after Royals' brilliant start in the western Canada Soccer League season two weeks ago when they blanked Vancouver Spartans, 3-0.

Concordia, Eagles Win

Edmonton Eagles took a firm hold on first place in the Eastern Division of the Western Canada Soccer League Saturday with a 2-1 victory over Vancouver Spartans in an interlocking game. Regina Concordia defeated Winnipeg Blues, 4-1, in a eastern division game in Regina.

Angels Suspend Johnson

ANAHEIM (AP) — Alex Johnson, the 1970 American League batting champion, was suspended indefinitely without pay Saturday by California Angels "for failure to give his best efforts to the winning of games with which he is concerned."

The announcement was made by the club's home office. The Angels' 32-43 and fighting to stay out of the American League West cellar, lost a 10-inning 4-3 decision to the White Sox in Chicago Saturday.

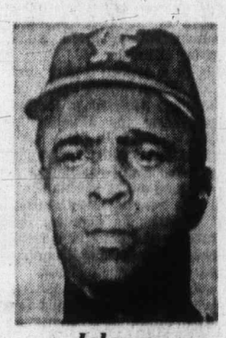

A club official said the suspension came 10 days after Johnson was given an official warning by general manager Dick Walsh.

Walsh said Johnson was "in constant violation of club rules and regulations," but he did not specify which rules.

"Walsh and Alex met the day after the trading deadline and he was placed on formal notice," said the official.

"It is tragic that a player of his talent has not applied himself. We waited this long in hopes of salvaging the individual. I have exhausted my patience," said Walsh.

If the suspension lasts longer than 10 days, the player may have his case automatically reviewed by the commissioner.
